CHAPTER XIII. (Continued.)
"What a lovely girl," he murmured. "I do not know how to express my admiration for her." "You are perfect, Margie - absolutely perfect!" Poor gentleman! How I pity him for the future. But his bewitching beauty will cheer him.

"Margie and I," she said, "have been in the city for some time now, and we are very happy. I have not a word to say about my life here. It is just what I needed. I have found a home, and I am very contented."

"You mean that you love me?" he asked, looking at her with a burning gaze. "I love you," she replied, "as I love my life. I love you because you are a good man, a kind man, and a man who respects me."

"I believe that all true love is chaste," she said. "I believe that a woman who loves a man should love him as she loves her life. I believe that a woman who loves a man should love him as she loves her life."

"What a beautiful girl!" he murmured. "I do not know how to express my admiration for her." "You are perfect, Margie - absolutely perfect!" Poor gentleman! How I pity him for the future. But his bewitching beauty will cheer him.

"I do not know what you would tell me," she said. "I do not know what you would tell me." "I do not know what you would tell me," she said. "I do not know what you would tell me."

"What is it?" she asked. "I do not know what you would tell me." "I do not know what you would tell me," she said. "I do not know what you would tell me."

"I do not know what you would tell me," she said. "I do not know what you would tell me." "I do not know what you would tell me," she said. "I do not know what you would tell me."
