A Young Man, in a Moment of Anger, Kills His Father and Himself—An Alleged Girl in Trouble Attempts to Commit Suicide at Ann Arbor.
A Perfidious and Fatal Deed.
Henry Kemmerer, aged 30, shot and killed his father, John Kemmerer, aged 70, set fire to a shed and then committed suicide. The Kemmerers were well-to-do farmers near Millbury. Heretofore, father and son were plotting when a trifling dispute arose and the son struck the father, a reputation from the old man's anger the son who went to a shed in the rear of the house and procured a repeating rifle. Just as he was about to fire, the house shot him twice—in the heart and in the stomach—and then turned the rifle on himself, but he was not completely through him, failed to do its work. By this time the old man was again on his feet and the son, with blood oozing from his forehead, breast, again shot his father, who stood pleading with him for mercy. The son then stepped up to the fire and as soon as it was burning satisfactorily he took down a double barreled shotgun and fired it through the chest and pulled both triggers. The charge tore away his breast and he fell dead in the blood. His father, with a lead flowing from his forehead, was tempted to pull him out, but he was so weak from the loss of blood that he could not do so. The house shot him twice and he was so weak from the loss of blood that he could not do so. The house shot him twice and he was so weak from the loss of blood that he could not do so.

STRENGTHENED CONGRUENCE.

Not since 1666 has London experienced a disastrous fire such as that which has swept the streets of the metropolis. Nearly 150 warehouses, filled with a stock of goods, were destroyed. The historic church of St. Giles suffered severely, the principal damage being to the roof, the spire, the belfry, the baptistry and Milton's statue. The total loss is estimated at over $25,000,000.
The scene most strikingly characteristic for several days, especially in view of the grave danger of the collapse of the buildings, was the possibility of fire beyond the possibility of being checked. More than 1,000 engines sprang for hours before the flames were subdued.
