

CATCHING THE FIRST FISH.

All the great anglers who are now beginning to make ready for a summer and fall of satisfactory sport could only begin themselves last week...

The writer of this has never come to be much of a fisherman, so he violates no confidence and imparts no reputation by openly stating that his first catch was a minnow...

There was once a boy who was very anxious indeed to become a fisherman. He had associated with him a number of other boys known by the same name...

Well, upon a certain day this boy and the other boys went to a good water in the salmon stream and there no keepers visible in any direction...

Another boy went over to the house of a friend of his father's to learn how to fish in a pretty little pond there was on the property...

The boy did not find his father's friend in the least glad to see him. He was busy, for one thing, and there had not been a fish worth looking at in that particular pond for a term...

AN ORPHAN GIRL.

(By Amy Handolph.) Mr. Follott had just finished his dinner when he saw a young girl...

He looked quickly up. A tall child of 12 stood there, her face flushed, her hair disheveled and her thick boots powdered over with the fine dust of the roads.

"I'm not a beggar," said "Can't a girl be hungry without being a beggar? I have come here to look for Paul Follott."

"That's my name," said the girl, "and I have come here to look for your little girl. My papa was a friend of your father's, and when he died he left me a little money."

"Dear heart," said that kindly personage, "it seems to me plain enough. Why don't you send her to the house of your father's friend?"

"I will go where she is," said Mr. Follott. "Take me to her at once." Poor little Gracie sat before the kitchen fire, her face pale and her hands clasped in prayer.

"Oh, TAKE ME AWAY!" and you helped her out with the debts that troubled her so badly, she declared with a gasp.

"The darling," she cried, enthusiastically embracing Gracie, "I would rather adopt the child of such a mother than the child of such a father."

"It's positively providential," said Mrs. Follott. "A thousand dollars a year, clearly added to my income."

"Oh, that does not signify," said the serene matron. "Her coat will be absolutely worthless."

It must be admitted that the Armenians are not without their own peculiarities. They are distinguished by an energy, a busyness and a fondness for acquisition that are almost super-human.

SCIENTIFIC POINTERS.

Wales was present at the first meeting of the Royal Society recently held in London. A number of distinguished people were present.

The double-bottom cake pan. The latest cake or pop pan is made of a double-bottom tin. The pan itself is all of one piece of metal.

Even the removable bottom pans while convenient in removing cake of pie, are not safe from scorching and burning.

Manufactured Fuel. The question of cheap fuel is a most important and vital one to all people.

Exploration in the Antarctic. It is stated authoritatively in London that the council of the Royal Geographical Society has agreed to take upon itself the responsibility of organizing a private expedition to the Antarctic.

A Curious Boat. A curious boat, well on land, water, ice goes equally well on land, water, ice.

His Dream Realized. At last he held the beautiful hand that he had so often seen in his dreams.

A Mutual Mistake. Two ladies stood on the door step of a friend's house.
