KILLING VILLAINS

HOW FAMOUS NOVELISTS DO MURDER.

Some of Them Are Brutal, Others Refined, While the Great Majority Endeavor to Do Something Original—Collins Alone Ghastly.

Dickens is responsible for a most entertaining gallery of rogues Quilp (the distorted dwarf), Rogue Riderhood (the ruffian), and Bill Sikes (the brutal cracksman) alike terminate their existence in a watery grave. No small additional pathos being added in the last case by the fate of the ragged, beaten cur, which, faithful even in death, follows his master's sullen corpse into the reeking mud of Folly Ditch. Ralph Nickleby, Gashford and Jonas Chuzzlewit take their own lives; whilst Uriah Heep, Squeers, and Littimer leave their country for their country's good in garbs gratuitously provided by government and freely embossed with "broad arrows."

Perhaps the most grewsome of Dickens' deaths is that provided by the fate of the ever-smiling Carker into which the irresistible locomotive is impressed, probably for the first time in the history of fiction.

Scott's villains most frequently meet with violent deaths at the hands of others. But the sensation-lover has, nevertheless, been catered for in the death of Anthony Foster, the accomplice of the prisoner Richard Varney. This miserable wretch is depicted as hiding from his pursuers in a secret cell. The entrance to this is fastened by means of a spring lock, of which, however, he omits to retain the key, with the consequence that he eventually perishes miserably of mingled fear and famine.

Lytton's "Night and Morning" gives us the coiner Gawtrey, who meets his fate at the hands of the Paris police from whom he is attempting to escape when a pistol-shot drops him over the side of a house to perish miserably. This idea of falling from a height is by no means confined to Lytton. It is utilized by Anthony Hope, in "Phroso," and by Stanley Weyman in "Under the Red Robe," where the villain and his victim fall from a lofty bridge into a seething torrent below. In this way, too, Conan Doyle killed the immortal Sherlock Holmes, who, fast locked in a struggle with "the greatest villain of them all," falls over an Alpine precipice.

Wilkie Collins brings his principal villain, the double-faced, calculating Count Fosco, to an ignoble end, he disappearing for a time, only to reappear upon the ghastly shelves of the Paris morgue. A still more ghastly fate is that of the she-fiend, Gagood, immortalized by Rider Haggard in "King Solomon's Mines." Having conducted Quatermain, Curtis and party into that celebrated monarch's rock-hewn treasury, which is guarded by a ponderous rising door of living rock, she touches a secret spring, by means of which the door begins once more to descend with a slow but irresistible motion.

Whilst the Englishmen are sizing up the jewelry she makes off through the rapidly lessening aperture. Her progress is temporarily arrested by the unfortunate girl Foulata, whom she stabs in order to free herself. Hurriedly scrambling over the threshold she is caught by the inexorable force which she has herself put in motion, and a realistically dramatic "scrunch" puts an end forever to the machinations of this truly horrible old woman.

Svengali, like Scott's Templar in "Ivanhoe," dies from an excessive mental strain acting upon the heart; whilst, to hark back to the days of the bluff Doctor of Fleet Street, the gentle, genial-hearted Goldsmith is contented to reform the rakish Squire Thornhill in order that he may at last become the exemplary husband of the gentle Olivia, around whom we wove that entrancingly simple narrative, "The Vicar of Wakefield."

Finally, the palm for "writing lurid" may fairly be accorded Harrison Ainsworth for his thrilling disposal of Jabe two ghoulish wretches who haunt the pages of his celebrated novel, "Old Saint Paul's." The creatures who fattened upon the spoils of the dead and dying during the Great Plague were wont to stow their ill-gotten gains in one of the Cathedral vaults. The Cathedral taking fire, they hasten thither in order to rescue their precious hoard. The greed of gain, however, misleads them into sojourning just a moment too long.

As they turn to leave the now stifling vault, they see that a thin silvery stream is making its way down the stairs, by which alone they can gain an exit. Even as they look it thickens perceptibly and before they can escape the whole stairway is blocked, and the vault around them begins to fill with the silvery liquid. When it is added that the harmless-looking fluid is nothing more or less than the molten lead from the roof and windows of the Cathedral, it will become apparent that even Mr. Gilbert's "something with boiling oil in it" possesses a dangerous rival in the pages of "Old Saint Paul."

Giant Japanese Soldier.

A Japanese paper says that a soldier of gigantic stature and enormous strength recently had the honor of being presented to the emperor. He is Private Yamashita of the Third regiment of Nagoya field artillery. He enlisted in December and is now 22 years of age. His muscular strength is so great that he can carry a field piece on his shoulders and climb up a mountain when horses are not available. Yamashita regularly receives two men's rations and his uniforms are made to order.

Government.

In the government of men a great deal may be done by severity, more by love, but most of all by a clear discernment and impartial justice, which pays no respect to persons.

HER BONNET.

Caught Afire While the Speaker Was Addressing an Audience.

New York Sun: At a meeting of the Society for Political Study yesterday the bonnet worn by the speaker of the day, Mrs. Belle Gray Taylor, caught fire from a drop-light on the speaker's desk, and had it not been for the presence of mind and fleet-footedness of Mrs. Almon Hensley would have been totally destroyed. Mrs. Taylor said afterward that there was no insurance on the bonnet, although there were several other things, including gold braid, blue velvet and black ostrich tips. When the accident happened the speaker was prefacing her talk, which was on woman's intuition, with a few remarks about five-minute papers, she having been asked to prepare one of that length.

"A long, dull paper is intolerable in this rapid history-making age," she was saying, "while a long, good paper has so much in it that you wish to consume"——

"Oh! Oh!" "Gracious me!" "Fire! Fire!" cried feminine voices from every part of the room, and the one man present looked at Mrs. Taylor's flaming headgear helplessly. He said afterwards that he might have known what to do if a woman had been in danger in a burning building, but that he was absolutely paralyzed at sight of a burning bonnet. But no one better knows the value of a fine bonnet than Mrs. Hensley, and before the lone man had recovered sufficiently to open his mouth she rushed to the platform and smothered the flames.

"What is it?" asked the speaker, calmly, when the danger was passed.

"Your best bonnet on fire," exclaimed many voices.

"Well, for once I've created a sensation," retorted Mrs. Taylor. "For once I've been actually brilliant. Ladies, the last word I uttered was consume," and then she went on with the remarks that had been interrupted by the threatened conflagration.

CLEVER LITTLE STORIES.

Judge Wheaton A. Gray, recently elevated to the Supreme court commission, was hearing a criminal case in Fresno, and on a warm day, at the end of a long harangue by the prosecuting counsel, he noticed one of the jurymen asleep. At once as the argument was completed the judge addressed the jury in this peculiar manner: "Gentlemen of the jury, the prosecuting attorney has completed his argument; wake up and listen to the instructions of the court!"

Since Joseph Choate's appointment as ambassador to England one of his wittiest sayings is being retold. It was made over a private dinner table at which he and Mrs. Choate were guests. Someone inquired of him who he would like to be if he could not be himself. He paused a few seconds, as if thinking over the list of world celebrities, and then his eye rested upon his wife. "If," he answered, "I could not be myself, I should like to be Mrs. Choate's second husband."

Senator Caffery's constitutional argument was listened to at one time by six senators. One of these was Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin. Senator Caffery read an extract in the course of his remarks, which attracted Mr. Spooner's attention. Perhaps it had a familiar sound. At any rate he began to manifest some curiosity. "From what is the senator reading?" he asked Mr. Caffery. The Louisiana senator turned around with a surprised, not to say an injured, air. "I am reading," he said, with crushing emphasis, "from the constitution of the United States."

Mme. Modjeska and her company were playing one winter in the extreme north, much to the discomfort of Count Bozenta, the Polish star's husband, who hates the chilly northern climate. But at that time the show business was at a very low ebb in the south. One particular cold day Mme. Modjeska found the count shivering from head to foot, in spite of the steam heat in the hotel. "Oh, my dear, my dear!" he implored, "let us go south for the rest of the season. This climate will kill us." "But, my dear," replied Madame, "the south is dead." "Yes," said the count, "but she is such a be-autiful corpse.

Baron Was Beneficent.

The Countess of Warwick drives a magnificently matched pair of white Arabians, which are known as the "Rothschild ponies." One of the pair was presented to her by the late baron and the story of the presentation illustrates his keen admiration for horse flesh and his gallant generosity. The countess had one white Arab and the baron another, and the baron discovered that the two were a perfect match. He was anxious to make a pair of them, and he offered to purchase the countess' treasure at her own figure but Lady Warwick refused all offers The baron had set his heart upon matching these two equine beauties and rather than be disappointed he presented his to the countess.

Wanted Soft Ones.

He had a crowd around him, and when he had placed his toothache cure on the board before him, and got his lamp brightly burning, he said: "Gentlemen, the last time I was in your fair city someone hit me with an egg. I sincerely——" At that instant a turnip, thrown by some one in the outer circle, struck the man's hat, and carried it ten feet away. He reached out his hand for it, and continued: "Thank you; I was going to say that I preferred turnips to eggs, but would it be asking too much of you to boil them first?"
