

SHE WHO HAS HAUNTED THE DREYFUS CASE.

Has Stood by the Fortunes of the Inevitable... She who has haunted the Dreyfus case...

These are questions which have the deepest interest to the public of Paris today. They have the same, if not a greater, interest in London, in Berlin, in America...

All the actors in the great world drama we know of her; she who has pronounced Dreyfus innocent. Her advocacy of the innocence of the harassed captain of artillery is well known...

had never heard of Dreyfus before the publicity given his unfortunate affair. Nor had he received from him or any agent of his any information whatsoever regarding the French affair or its conditions...

Not less notable was the action of La Dame Blanche in this country. She came here incognito also. Her connection with the incident that followed was unsuspected for a considerable time. This is what occurred...

Early last spring a woman of considerable beauty called at Tiffany's, on Grand Central Terminal, New York, and left a beautiful string of pearls to be appraised and possibly purchased. The next day two men, obviously Frenchmen, made minute inquiries about the same pearls...

The whole affair was so puzzling that detectives were getting to work to ascertain who the queer couple were. Then it was whispered that the jewels were some that had been presented to Madame de Paris, the intimate of Esterhazy, then living in exile in London...

The comtesse was no stranger in the American metropolis, as she had been in this country in 1897, and she had patronized the leading New York jewelry houses. It was at that time that the jailer on Devil's Island put Dreyfus to extraordinary suffering, encasing his ankles in iron, as well as keeping him confined strictly to his iron cage...

Who was behind the daring scheme? Comtesse de Martel had not been seen in Paris for some time. A strange Frenchman had offered her jewels for sale to an American firm. The conclusions are obvious...
