

BOAT SONG.

When we parted, you and I, Singing while we passed the shore,
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Little clouds in the sky,
Just to make it fairer,
When we parted, you and I,
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Once again the blue sky, How, ah, did they fairer seem?
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Far from you the days dragged by,
Wholly home without a grace, Since we parted, you and I,
You were true then, you were true, Gaily making my life a dream,
While we parted, you and I,
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

Bill! I see you, I see you, Sweetheart, make it all my dream,
While we parted, you and I,
Was it? Yes, 'twas last July!

top had come from her, as if by magic, in the air, and she had looked over the simulating, prear-ranging, to his father's house. It looked like the sea. All through the life he had lived. Next year, if times grows better, I'll go to the sea.
Even after he owned a small farm of his own and had wanted or sought grasshoppers contained, soon after reason to wither and blast his straight rows of corn, hope still kindled his eyes and he only said, "It crops is good next year, I'll see the sea."

He had married early, as is customary in small communities, but his wife had died after a year on the desolate farm, leaving a little daughter. Then, after continued failures on the place, he had lost it on a mortgage and had moved into the town where he could "pick up something doing odd jobs.
As an unusually strong blast of wind dashed a multitude of fine sand against the window pane, he glanced up and met his daughter's steady, but sym-pathic glance.
"I've got it almost figured out, I could go on the freight to New York for $50. We could raise about a hundred on the home, could we not, and you could have the rest to live on till I get back. You see I'm gettin' old, Lize, and if I don't go pretty soon, here in your advanced years, fully and he shifted his stony hands helplessly. "I don't go pretty soon, I'll never see the great ocean." He looked about the dimly lighted room and continued, "I've so grand, they say follows of what I am and it's green, like things a green."
