

JACK LONG'S TWO THANKSGIVINGS

Seated by the glowing embers in the gleamy old parlor, watching the flames eat their way up the dull grate, was Jack Long. Thirty-five years had passed since that last Thanksgiving night, and his hair had been as full of gray and aged, his eyes as dim and shadowy, as the ordinary life of his...

There is always an opportunity in a quaffle for a six word pun and thus between partners. "All join hands and circle to the left." "I want to ask you something," she inquired, when they were at their first dance.

Mingled with those moments was a fair and radiant maiden with her sunny eyes and curly hair. His eye caught up in her eyes and she was his, his heart, his soul, his life. She was his, his heart, his soul, his life. He was her, her heart, her soul, her life. They were together, and they were happy.
