That Is the Lucky Ticket that Secured the Range Saturday Evening Last.

A Good Time Had at Schlaack & Co.'s Store During the Sale. Several Ranges Disposed of. Owner of No. 277 Will Please Call and Claim Property. Everybody Pleased.

For some time past the handsome hardware store of J. H. Schlaack & Co. has been a busy place. Everyone for miles around knows that on Saturday evening, April 14, 1900 someone would be made a present of a beautiful steel polished range, made by the Detroit Car Stove Co., of Detroit, Mich.

Many new articles were purchased and old ones settled for, each one paid in giving the person a ticket which might secure the prize. Another feature that drew the crowds to the store was a dainty lunch prepared by the ladies of the church, of which everyone could partake. The evening was one of the pleasantest Mr. [illegible]

Maxwell-Hutchison.

A beautiful wedding took place thursday evening at 6:30 at the home of bride's mother Mrs. Jennie C. Hutchison, whereby Miss Estell Hutchison was made the bride of Alex Mackenzie Brownlee Maxwell. Promptly at the hour announced the bridal party took their places and to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Lena Hutchison, sister of the bride, entered the front parlor facing the guests. Rev. Edenburn, the brides pastor, officiated being assisted by Rev. Hubbard of Columbus.

The bride was attired in white organdie trimmed in lace and carried a beautiful bouquet of bridal roses. She looked very charming indeed, and her husband has every reason to be proud of having won her for his wife.

The ceremony was short and concise, [illegible] followed, immediately after which the guests were ushered into the elegant supper served. The bridal table was most beautifully arranged in [illegible] hue [illegible] for seven dozen.

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were driven to Novi where they took the 10:40 train for Detroit and other points. Mr. Maxwell is a [illegible] Mrs. Maxwell is a [illegible]

THE CONVENTION

Given by the "Old Maids" Was a Success. To Be Repeated Monday Evening.

The [illegible] Maids' convention which was held in Lahaway Hall Tuesday night was a great success and considering the unfavorable weather was well attended.

The curtain rose showing the hostess seated in her parlor industriously knitting. Immediately the members of the convention began to arrive and were ushered to seats in the parlor. The costumes were of the most unique description. The old maids' dress was in keeping with their calling, their [illegible] being somewhat behind the times.
