

Pointed Questions

What do you think of sales, so called, with no motive given for their existence?

What do you think of buying damaged goods at so-called cheap prices?

They are bound to give out when least expected. Facts rule, and the reason that such goods cannot be sold for more is because they are worth no more. Comparison will prove it. I challenge any and all to give better than my ordinary, everyday values. New goods, none damaged, at prices lower than any, because I have lower expenses than any of my competitors.

THE TWO TRUANTS.

"I hate school!" The speaker, a good looking, dark-haired boy, snatched his book shut as he spoke and peered nervously over the desk and under the desk at a pretty little girl, and, looking across the aisle, Roland Havens saw Marie Gray, the prettiest and naughtiest girl in school, smiling and nodding at him. "I heard what you said," said Marie, and I agree with you. School is a hateful old thing.

"Let's play truant tomorrow." The words were out of Roland's mouth before he thought, but, once having said them he was not going to take them back.

"I'm afraid," said Marie, looking at him out of the corner of her blue eyes.

"I have you to go to," said Roland. "We can go as we went yesterday. I will tell the teacher tomorrow that I want to see Sister Sue and you can tell her you want to spend the day with your grandmother."

"I'm afraid," said Marie, looking at him out of the corner of her blue eyes.

"I have you to go to," said Roland. "We can go as we went yesterday. I will tell the teacher tomorrow that I want to see Sister Sue and you can tell her you want to spend the day with your grandmother."

thought that the children could have been venturesome enough to go to the woods, but there was really no telling what they would do.

Finally the searching party found a mitten dropped by Roland at the fence which led into the woods, and with this clue they started on their search in the cold, wet forest.

It was 6 o'clock when Roland's father found his muffled, filled with violets, and this cheered them on. At 9 they came across the children, dressed snugly against the roots of a big tree, both fast asleep.

The next day Roland went back to school as a changed boy. He realized how much trouble he had made his father and all his friends and determined to do better. Marie took her share of the blame and for a while at least no one would have recognized the studious boy who stood at the head of his class as the careless Roland of a short time before. (Continued)

FOR THE BOYS.

Excludes Failure to Report the Progress of School.

The department of state is informed that the Persian government has decided to send another diplomatic representative to Washington.

It has had no minister in this country since 1888 when Hodge Hosen Khan left from the city in indignation and it was because of the treatment he received from the Persian public.

Mr. Hosen Khan, says a Washington correspondent, was a proud and haughty person, he dressed in Persian costume, and whenever he appeared upon the scene he attracted the attention of the crowd.

He was attended by his domestic servant, Mirza Mahomed, who rode in a motor car, and whenever he appeared upon the scene he attracted the attention of the crowd.
