

LOST ON THE... VELDT

A STORY OF THE BOER CAMPAIGN IN NATALASA

By H. B. Mackenzie

They rode all night straight on without a halt. It was a hopeless search for any sign of the fugitive. They rode on for several hours without a halt. The sun was in the west and the moon was in the east. The night was dark and the moon was shining brightly. The wind was blowing from the west and the dust was being kicked up by the hooves of the horses. They rode on for several hours without a halt. The sun was in the west and the moon was in the east. CHAPTER VIII.

For Bluebell's chafe had come and had been long. When night was beginning to fall they rode to the river again. Bluebell thought it was still the Tugela river, but she was not sure. She had to look carefully for a drift by which to pass over. Bluebell was by the river and was quite excited as she was hardy to keep her seat. Her mind was as fixed on some opportunity to escape presenting itself as if she were a professional thief. It instantly whenever it should come. They rode down towards the river. Moore a little in advance. Bluebell was not far behind her. Moore did not utter a word. He guessed that he was rather doubtful as to the safety of crossing the "drift." Her heart beat as if it would choke her. What if her chance were coming now?

Moore rode down the grassy slope of the river very cautiously, but evidently before he was aware his horse's forefeet had plunged into the stream. He turned and called: "Come off, Bluebell! It is all right!" Bluebell's guide urged forward her horse, which, however, seemed loth to take the plunge. Her eyes were fixed on Moore, whose horse was making a comparatively shallow water before her. "A wild thought rushed through her mind. Should she spring off her horse in midstream, trusting to the swift current to carry her away before her pursuers could reach her? She might be drowned. Although she could swim her clothes would be an insuperable obstacle. But death by such gentle means would be preferable to the fate before her. They were just about to plunge into the water when Chipanza gave a sudden cry. Bluebell's startled eyes, following Moore, saw his horse suddenly stumble in the water. Moore was plunged off her horse and was thrown clean over his head and disappeared.

He was drawing. With a strong arm, she pushed him forward and he was able to get down. She looked at her long cloak, for it was now growing very warm, hung it over her shoulder by the strap, and began the terrible journey. She could make no toilet, and her feet she could not feel. Already she was beginning to feel a heavy hunger. He had not had time to realize that she was a woman and that her fall brought her physical pain of her position.

Home Life of the Krugers

(Victoria Letter)

Miss Kruger, the wife of the president of the South African Republic, is reported to have been suffering from a severe attack of malaria. She is now recovering and is expected to be able to travel soon.

The Krugers have a large family and are very popular. They live in Pretoria and are very active in public life. The president is a very capable and energetic man and his wife is a very devoted and accomplished woman.

The Krugers are very interested in the welfare of their country and are always ready to do their best for it. They are very generous and are always ready to help those in need. They are very patriotic and are very proud of their country.

Mrs. Kruger, the wife of the president of the South African Republic.

When to Harvest Hogs. The cost per pound of growing and finishing a hog for market increased with the size and age of the animal. It costs much less to raise two hogs weighing 300 pounds each than to raise one hog weighing 600 pounds. The pigments are too heavy to be produced under ordinary circumstances.

Reduction of Women. The western world is suffering from a shortage of women. This is due to the fact that many women are not working. This is a serious problem and it needs to be solved.

Baking Hot Diseases. The disease is caused by the bacteria of the streptococcus group. It is a very serious disease and it can be fatal. It is caused by eating food that has been contaminated with the bacteria.
