

.....THE ABSENCE OF AGATHA >>>

Miss Agatha's absence from the house was a mystery to all who knew her. She had been seen in the city for several days, but no one could tell where she had gone. Her friends were worried, for she was a very kind and helpful person, and her absence was a great loss to the household.

It was a long time before she returned. When she did, she was very pale and looked as if she had been through a great deal of trouble. She had a few words to say to her friends, but she would not say where she had been or what had happened to her. She seemed to be in a state of great distress, and her friends were very anxious to help her.

She was very quiet for several days, and her friends were very anxious to know what had happened to her. They tried to talk to her, but she would not say a word. She seemed to be in a state of great distress, and her friends were very anxious to help her.

"Where?" asked Dr. Arbell. "In New Orleans twelve years ago. It was the young physician who owned the garden. I was eight years old then. My father took a voyage to New Orleans and I went with him."

"And you returned with him?" "Yes, I returned with him. He was very kind to me. He showed me the garden and I was very happy. I was eight years old then. My father took a voyage to New Orleans and I went with him."

CENSORS IN WAR TIME.

WRITERS GREATLY HAMPERED IN AFRICA.

The censorship of literature in Africa during the war has been a subject of much discussion. Writers have found themselves greatly hampered in their work, and many have been forced to leave the continent. The government has been very strict in its censorship, and has not allowed any works to be published that might be considered subversive or that might harm the war effort.
