CHICAGO TO DENVER.

Another Descriptive Letter from Bert Blakeslee.

Harrison,
Central part of Southern Nebraska,
Dear folks at home:

Dropped you a line yesterday, but it is about 8:30 p.m. and every one is settled after the day's trip and I am either thinking or chatting quietly. Everyone is well pleased with Chicago. One boy is speaking of it said that if he owned both Chicago and Hell, he'd rent Chicago and live in Hell. We left there at 11:40 p.m. and during the night made about 400 or 500 miles, crossed the Mississippi river about daybreak, but I was in the upper berth so didn't see it. We crossed the Missouri and Platte rivers today. The Missouri is not as wide or as deep as the Saginaw, runs very swiftly and is a deep mud yellow, never saw such water except in a mud puddle. The Platte river bed is much wider, but has only a few little streams, two small streams coming down, each about twice as wide as the little creek at home. It, too, is very muddy, but not as much so as the Missouri.

The country through Iowa is very fine, but after we left Missouri it is very hilly and is settled in the least. Some of the hills are high enough for mines and there are a few mines. Nebraska is the place for us farmers. In the early part of the day I noticed the farms were small, but after we left Missouri they were larger and larger. We just rode for hours and hours through farms and saw hundreds of them. Some of the farmers have 1,000 acres in wheat, and others have 1,000 acres in corn, and others have 1,000 acres in oats, and others have 1,000 acres in hay, and others have 1,000 acres in pasture, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit and vegetables, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit and vegetables and flowers, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit and vegetables and flowers and grain, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit and vegetables and flowers and grain and hay, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit and vegetables and flowers and grain and hay and oats, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of crops and stock and poultry and bees and fruit and vegetables and flowers and grain and hay and oats and wheat, and others have 1,000 acres in all kinds of
