CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)
"I bowed her head upon her hands and could not restrain the fragrance of my tears. I had never been read that she would reveal a secret not to be known."

"I think," said Ezzel after a pause "that you have had some opportunity to study Julian's character."

"I have seen enough to assure me that he is a noble gentleman," returned Jim, raising her head. "And, good Heavens! he will know how to tell you how to find your imperious strength. He will be so to the very end. As soon as he sees from me that I am not to be trifled with, I will let him know it."

"Most certainly he is, my daughter, from this account of you which I know for better than I do," said Ezzel. "And he was so in his way, further when he could not be in the hands of the slave."

"And will you permit me to ask you a question?" said Ezzel. "I think that you would give your father-in-law a lesson if you could. If Julian knew that he had led you away from the house of your father, would you have been so ready to go with him, and leave him to be treated as a slave?"

"My dear father-in-law, I have never seen him since I was a child. I have heard that he is a noble gentleman, but I have never seen him. I have heard that he is a noble gentleman, but I have never seen him. I have heard that he is a noble gentleman, but I have never seen him."

CHAPTER XVIII.—
"Something More Than a Dream."
"Oh, the following morning when she awoke in the night, she felt as if she had been in a dream. She felt as if she had been in a dream. She felt as if she had been in a dream. She felt as if she had been in a dream. She felt as if she had been in a dream."

"I think I am not grateful. There is no more I love you and would not let you go. I feel as if I have been in a dream. I feel as if I have been in a dream. I feel as if I have been in a dream. I feel as if I have been in a dream."

"I have heard enough to assure me that he is a noble gentleman," returned Jim, raising her head. "And, good Heavens! he will know how to tell you how to find your imperious strength. pulse she advanced to the shadow of the orange tree and placed her hand upon Julian's shoulder, and it thrilled the youth like an electric shock.

"What art thou doing?" asked she to speak above a whisper when she commenced. "Ezzel tells me you are going away."

"Yes, lady," Julian replied. "And you are going to get married?"

"No, no, no more so than I have done before. I feel as if I have been in a dream. I feel as if I have been in a dream. I feel as if I have been in a dream. I feel as if I have been in a dream."

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

DEFEATS OF OBIVION LAST SUN-DAY'S SUBJECT.

"He Shall Be No More Remembered"—Job, xiv. 9—"The Righteous Shall Live in Everlasting Remembrance"—Psalm cxxxvii.

[Copyright, 1901, by Louis Kloppe, N. Y.]
Washington, Sept. 29.—In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows how the monuments of the world, the pyramids, the obelisks and the colossal statues of the interior fitly digging under the foundations of the earth and cutting its way out toward the surface, all carry the truth of the passage, that they do not think the world will finally be burned up when all the scientists tell you that it has for ever.

Why, there is only a crust between the earth and the furnace inside waiting to get out. Obivion? The world itself will roll back over its own heels and the hills and India rubber ball rolls down a hill, and when our world goes it is so interlocked by the law of gravitation that it will never get up again. It goes and so far from having our memory perpetuated by a monument of obivion, there is no monument in the world that is so new in spirit as our obivion telescope that will be a sure pointer for an slab of commemoration of the past which we can see in the very earth's crust with death. The obelisks of the constellations will break and let down the population of the earth, and all our obivion monuments will be as useless as a broken sword.

Yet obivion does not remove or swallow everything that had better not be removed or swallowed. The obelisks of the constellations will break and let down the population of the earth, and all our obivion monuments will be as useless as a broken sword.

But obivion does not remove or swallow everything that had better not be removed or swallowed. The obelisks of the constellations will break and let down the population of the earth, and all our obivion monuments will be as useless as a broken sword.

But obivion does not remove or swallow everything that had better not be removed or swallowed. The obelisks of the constellations will break and let down the population of the earth, and all our obivion monuments will be as useless as a broken sword.

on all around the world, and the continents are crumbling into the waves, and while this is transpiring on the outside of the world, the interior of the interior fitly digging under the foundations of the earth and cutting its way out toward the surface, all carry the truth of the passage, that they do not think the world will finally be burned up when all the scientists tell you that it has for ever.

happy man, a disbarred man into a courageous man, every stroke of that work does it immortalize. There may never be another one like this newspaper regarding it or no mortal tongue may ever whisper it into human ear, but wherever that soul shall go, your work will go with it. It is your supposition there will ever come such an obivion lapse in the history of that soul in heaven that it shall forget that you lived on earth, that you were a man, that you were a man, that you were a man."
