Ran for Their Lives

Party of Hunters Routed by Mosquitoes.

Two hunters, Thomas Cowles and Jerry Fisher, nearly fell victims to an attack of fat cedars near Negro Head, S. C., during the July hot spell. They were in the Sound side hunting jack snipe. Nearly exhausted with pursuit and half-still cattle feeding in the marshes, Cowles noticed that the flies were getting uneasy and one settled upon the back of his companion, who replied laughingly: "Cowles, quit on watching the animals and suddenly cried out:

"I have it. The wind has changed to the west and cedars are going to be thick."

Cattle Gave the Alarm.

Cowles had been at Negro Head before and knew that the west wind would drive the hordes of mosquitoes which lay in the marshes. The two had only waited for the water which was a little more than ankle deep when the wind changed. Now was provided a scene of such dreadful description. The cattle and the horses, maved by former experiences, turned their faces eastward and, bellowing and bellowing scurried across the yellow sands. The two men in the boat, following their example, pushed their craft toward the east.

To Meet Department Issue.

Unable to compete further with big department stores, thirty of the small-er shopkeepers of Chicago will open an immense establishment, to be conducted on the co-operative plan, with a capital stock of $1,000,000. The promoter of the scheme is C. F. Gillman, president of the North Side Business Men's association, who fought department stores in the legislature during the last session. He says he has found as have others, to their hard, that it is of
