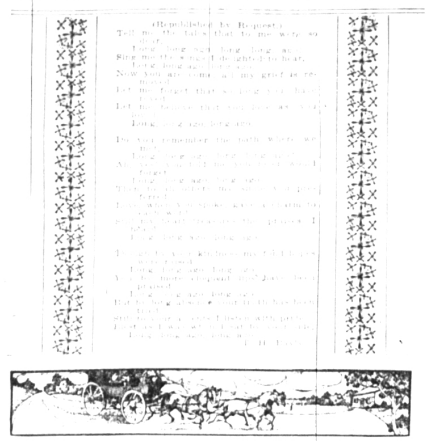
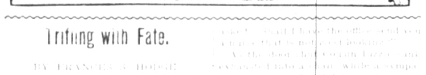
Long, Long Ago.





Trifling with Fate.

By [illegible]

[illegible] In a family of nine children, Miss Baker was strongly [illegible] to her mother, while down in the library the other members of the family huddled in a terrified group speaking in whispers or gazing blankly at the certain misery of the future.

A half dozen of pneumonia. In Normand had a case of pneumonia. One will be here in an hour. Then he had started out of the house.

Now in this family of adoring women we were pampered. They had no sympathy and no mercy for us. Our slightest ailment called forth a storm of solicitude. Even the death of a man who had married into the family and didn't that piece that all mothers of the products on time advantage of a man was said with the condition to make love to him." Was [illegible] whose matrimonial prospects were unknown to him, the subject of numerous family discussions as to be courted into marrying a nurse. Did not each suffer have a friend saved from [illegible] and the whole future happiness of the family depended on the sort of girl he married? A nurse. Cousin Lizzie, a tiny woman of uncertain years, was for the emergency as she lived [illegible] for a nurse, but [illegible] out only [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
