FASHIONS OF 1920.

A Frenchman's Forecast of Feminine Trade Twenty Years Hence.

When they are grown up, the young ladies of the future who were born with this century will look back with amazement on the manners and dress of the days when their mothers were girls. If M Octave Uzanne be a true prophet, evolution in things feminine will move not by degrees, by by reparkable bounds between the present year and 1920. The long dresses of today will appear far more quaint to the girls of that period than do the flounced skirts of the 80s to the modern woman. In 1920, says M Octave Uzanne, the feminine prejudice which arises [illegible] except of course in ballets to objects displaying the calves of their legs will have become entirely extinct. Rational dress as advocated by [illegible] will not however prevail. The knickerbocker will have vanished at last, but the attire of 1920 will [illegible] and [illegible] will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
