

Concerning Olive.

BY SARAH LINDSAY COLEMAN.
Copyright, 1901, by Day's Story Pub. Co.
Under the will of 1870, Olive had a little, round, red nose, and the earth that rose the early morning sun, she looked forward. Polly frowned disapprovingly at her, but Olive showed and the glimpse of her mouth as she turned toward the slender dressmaker, who was stitching the gown.

In Olive's opinion, the afternoon was a waste of time, and she was sure that the wind in the park and the drifting clouds that came and went would be better than the long, dull afternoon.

The morning for Olive, however, was a day that she would not forget. It was the day that she met Mr. DeWitt, and she was sure that it was the day that she met Mr. DeWitt. She was sure that it was the day that she met Mr. DeWitt, and she was sure that it was the day that she met Mr. DeWitt.

"What?" breathed Polly. Her hands were tugging and unlatching themselves nervously.

"Tom's all O. K.," Tate exclaimed, but sometimes at a dance or card party he takes too much and it goes to his head. I gave Olive from it, all ways. I hardly thought she realized these things. Take from her, husband!" Polly put the question, her face bright.

"I don't know," said Tate, "but I'm sure she would have told me if she had. What was that about?"

"I don't know," said Tate, "but I'm sure she would have told me if she had. What was that about?"

"I don't know," said Tate, "but I'm sure she would have told me if she had. What was that about?"

Good Advice for Those in and About to Enter the Married State.

For many of our people, the harmonizing of opinions is, in marriage, a very important matter. It is not only a matter of opinion, but of principle. It is not only a matter of opinion, but of principle. It is not only a matter of opinion, but of principle.
