SAYINGS and DOINGS

Edmund Clarence Steadman. Edmund Clarence Steadman, whom a literary paper has pronounced the "greatest and sanest critic of poetry now before the public," is indisputably the foremost living American poet. He began his literary career as a reporter for the New York Tribune. He had already obtained his degree of master from Yale and Dartmouth. For his lectures during the year 1887-88, he was elected professor upon his literary doctorate and in the same year he published his able and analytical work, "The Nature and Elements of Poetry." The lectures at Columbia had been already delivered at Johns Hopkins as the initial results of the Steadman foundation. Mr. Steadman's poetry was published at various times and in various forms between the years 1880 and 1884. His public not so large in America as it is in England, owing to the lack of appreciation of his work in this country. His poetry is what we give you for less than 10c per copy. Buy at Wholesale.
