Riot Raged on Detroit's Streets.

Riot reigned for a time in the streets of Detroit on the night of the 10th, and a number of persons have upon their bodies the following morning painful reminders of the melee coming. Early in the evening or less badly injured by accidents, bruises and brickbats and more than a dozen policemen were hurt in the fighting which followed. Fire and police officials were unable to cope with the mob, and the militia was called out. It is probable that 12 persons were killed outright in the fighting. Many of the dead and injured were strikers, but bystanders suffered severely. Many of the latter were struck by flying bricks and clubs. Many persons were injured in the excitement of the crowds fleeing from the police and militia. A woman was trampled upon by the crowd and died from her injuries. Many persons were injured by falling from windows and fire escapes in their efforts to escape the police. Passing cars were stopped and the occupants beaten
