

The Faith

He was a dream, but God lived in a dream.

All that he had written of a supplication for the Lord, had been burned. What he wrote to replace it was alive and human—it was and he. The Little Teacher's simple existence, the joy, the sorrow of every day was painted with the rest and freedom and charm of a dream.

There came a day when he closed the last chapter and his heart beating with enthusiasm, tied up the package and sent it into the world. From which he had been over for four months an alien. It was the end of summer. The cards were sent upon all red rose hips scarlet on the bushes. The wheat fields had been sown and were being filled with grain. The year's work was being completed also. It was harvest time.

It would be two weeks before he would expect to hear from Mr. Morris. How should he employ this time? The old ways the slow ways with rest and peace. Then the armor must be girded for the work of the world.

But that first, he must go to see the Little Teacher.

"I cannot take my eyes from you," declared Van Vliet. "You are an other worlder and a saint. All the book, 'The Little Teacher' you have made me shed the first tears I ever shed over a man."

"You are a saint," said Mr. Morris. "You are a saint," said Mr. Morris. "You are a saint," said Mr. Morris.

TALMAGES' SERMON.

"BE YE ANGRY AND SIN NOT"—EPH. VI. 20.

The Sin of Alcoholism—The Spirit of Gambling—Aid for the Unemployed—Intemperance—Aid for the Unemployed—The Working Class.

(Copyright, 1913, by Louis Klepp, N. Y.)

Washington, June 30. A delicate and difficult duty is by Dr. Talmage this discourse used upon a special occasion given to quick temper, see Ephesians VI. 20. "Be ye angry and sin not." The text is the text of the sermon.

Equipage of temper, alcoholism, patience, forbearance are excluded by the most radiant pens of inspiration that our text calls for with all first sight is startling. A certain kind of anger is approved, yet we are commanded to indulge in it. The most of us are so. In our anger, we are so. In our anger, we are so. In our anger, we are so.
