

Pauline Astor Prefers Beauty to a Title

considering their social grandeur. What bliss to have babies in the family, thought Mr. Astor.

So it was all arranged between Miss Astor and the Duke of Roxburgh. But a grave omission was made in the arrangement for Miss Astor was not consulted. To make everything lovely the duke really fell in love with the girl that everybody said he ought to marry.

But she didn't fall in love with him. Contrariwise, she fell in love with a commoner, with considerably less than nothing, but the handsomest man in the handsomest company of the first-looking regiment in England—Captain H. Fraser of the Royal Guards. Most people who have seen him say that unquestionably he is the handsomest man in the world. Certain it is that he has had a career with women unequaled since the day of Dashing Jack Churchill, afterward first Duke of Marlborough, and with the possible exception of George IV, the "First Gentleman of Europe" of the age.

He is son of General the Hon. Sir David MacDowall Fraser, retired, and nephew of Lord Saltoun. But lack of fortune and even farther cannot influence the popularity of the man, who, since Captain Al Ames' retirement, has been known as the flower of the most perfect company of men in all the British kingdom.

How the Miss Astor first is not known. She was hard to meet, and, dead, for her pretty high heels have steadily pierced the soles of her shoes, which she wears particularly anxious to keep Captain Fraser out of her sight, because he was too attractive for a man without a title.

How the two met is not known. Some say when riding in the park in the mornings. Others say that Miss Astor saw Captain Fraser sitting his horse in front of his company, and she never forgot him.

Before she met him, or saw him, whichever it was, he was about ready to go to Canada, Duchesse de Marlborough. Roxburgh was always with her, and it was understood that there was an understanding. But it all has been changed within the last three weeks.

London expects the expatriate daughter to marry the soldier soon, with or without her father's blessing.

But Astor may have his way yet. No formal announcement of the engagement, if you will turn the keys in the lock.

There is a clever little aquarist made like a picture of the ocean bed, with wrecks and seaweed on the sand. It is a great and interesting thing, and the fish in this marine painting are alive and swim about in real water.

The main interest in the exhibition is not, after all, in the toys, clever as these are; it is in the fact that such crowds press to see them—crowds of French war, and in the revolutionary war.

BIRTHPLACE OF THE STARS AND STRIPES

The last of the great army of American tourists who shipwrecked land during the past summer and early autumn have now left its shores. All the "lights" of interest have been stilled, including, of course, the adjacent church at Great Brington, Northamptonshire, wherein repose some of the ancestors of George Washington.

Green passed the year with the Stuart reign. He was in London at the same time, and his death was accidental. Defoe must have meant that the "true-born Englishman" could not live in England during the reign of the Stuarts.

Robinson Crusoe was never the subject of Charles II., or believed to have originated at Sulgrave Manor, the gift of Henry VIII. to Lawrence Washington. The Lawrence Washington lived prior to his residence in Brington. He caused to be erected over the porch of the manor house a family crest of three crowns and two stripes, which also appears over his tomb. Though this crest of Lawrence Washington is believed to have been adopted by the American States flag, American visitors to King's Head appear to have little sight of the fact. The illustration shows Sulgrave Manor.

James II. he was not a man without a country. He was not had little country of his own; but he was a man in a country where there was no king but him.

Caught a Bullet in His Teeth.

His iron-clad jaw saved the life of John Green. He was shot in the mouth, but only lost two teeth. Green is a negro, the son of a white man, and was a man of the name of Mercy. There was a quarrel, and Mercy fired at Green. Instead of falling dead, Green was wounded in the mouth, and then went to the Pennsylvania Hospital for treatment. Green, after splitting out the bullet and two teeth, returned home.

Sugar Trade Proves Sugar.

Sugar exists not only in the cane, beet root and maple, but in the sap of 187 other plants and trees.

Frederick Yarn.

The first street railroad was laid in N. Y. City in 1825, between the city hall and Fourteenth street.
