POLITICS AT MANDALE.

By W. H. DUFFY.

(Copyright, 1903, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

All during the sixty days strenuous efforts had been made on the part of the majority to elect a senator, but during the campaign of the fall before it had been openly stated that the legislator of the coming session who did not go home "fixed" for life would be foolish. Both sides were expected to use enormous sums of money, and the senatorship was expected to be the prize of the man who was willing to pay the most for it. This was the sentiment of a large number of people during the campaign.

Long before the first ballot for the senatorship had been cast on the second Tuesday of the session, the leaders of the majority had decided that as they had elected a majority of the members of the body, there would be no necessity for them to buy the votes already theirs. They held that the men could not have the "gall" to go back on the constituents who had elected them, and besides, a clean election would give their party a large amount of prestige, as it would serve to give a knockout blow to the rumors of corrupt uses of money in legislative halls, when their party was in control.

When the first ballot was cast, the votes of the majority were badly scattered, but day by day, as the balloting proceeded, and the session came nearer to an end, it was evident that the votes of the majority were simmering down to two candidates, but it was also evident that this state of affairs was the result of the clever wire pulling of the opposition, as the candidates were old rivals and one would never give way to the other.

The minority, on the other hand, had been hanging closely together, and it was clear that they were being maneuvered by a clever political schemer. During the early part of the session that had cast their 35 votes for former Representative Moore, a man who had borne a spotless reputation, but on the 46th day of the sitting they switched and cast their vote solidly for a man who had the reputation of being the smoothest politician in the state—John Flaherty—who since his defeat for Congress four years before had held a fat federal position and had built up a political machine powerful in its environment. When the minority switched to Flaherty the leaders of the other side began to look worried, for they knew that the skillful politician would stop at nothing to secure an election.

Thus it went on during the remaining days of the session, enough members to cause a deadlock or elect the minority candidate, remaining stubborn and mean, on account of not receiving the price for their vote.

The session had just taken a five-minute recess, after a twelve hours' sitting, and the members were just getting back to their seats from the saloon across the street. The floor of the House was crowded with lobbyists, for the minority who had been brought from all parts of the state to lend "moral courage" to the men who were to be purchased, and was immediately whispered around that Flaherty had fixed the insurgent members of the majority and that he would be elected on the next ballot.

The session was called to order, and an intense quiet seemed to come over the packed throng.

"We will now proceed with the two hundred and eighteenth ballot for the election of a United States senator to represent the state," began the president.

"I demand a call of the house," shouted a senator who was seated with the majority. Everyone knew that this was merely a subterfuge to gain time, for it could be told at a glance that every seat was full. So everyone wondered what was to be gained by the delay, and as soon as the call began three leaders of the majority were seen to approach each other and hold a hurried consultation. The clerk rushed through the call with marvelous rapidity.

"The members of the joint assembly are all present, Mr. President," he announced.

"The sergeant-at-arms will see that each member remains in his seat unless he is addressing the chair," announced the presiding officer, as the members began to stir around, and as the three majority leaders took their respective desks, their faces still clouded with intense anxiety. This was the condition on the entire majority side of the house. On the other side, each member seemed to be struggling with an almost uncontrollable excitement.

"I wish to explain my vote."

The roll-call began. The first name on the list was Anderson, a stalwart minority man.

"Flaherty!" he shouted.

"Axtell," called the clerk, and all eyes were turned on the veteran majority senator. Axtell was not a leader in any sense of the term, but he was the senior member of the party, and his advice was always listened to with the greatest respect. He was a safe counselor.

"I wish to explain my vote," announced the gray-haired lawmaker as he rose from his chair, and everybody listened as he began to speak. He first referred in touching terms to the strong attachments that had sprung up between the members during their service in the session, and then expressed his sorrow that the bitter struggle on the election of a senator had brought about such hard feelings. He then took up the issue of the campaign and related how the majority had been elected pledged to send a man to the federal senate who was in sympathy with their political ideas. At this the recalcitrant members of the majority began to squirm in their seats, and before he had gone far they were looking downcast.

"You say that if we select a democrat who is suitable to you, you will help elect him," he cried, turning to them. "Who is this man, I demand? Do you mean this statement, or is it but a miserable subterfuge, by which you expect to wait until the last moment and then betray our party? This is your scheme, so it has been openly stated in these halls, and you have not had the courage to deny it. Do you think, men, that you are nervy enough to go back to your democratic constituents, after having helped elect Flaherty to the federal senate?

"A newsboy entered with the Morning Enterprise."

"You say that if we select a man who is suitable to you he will be elected. You know that the man you are supporting can never be elected, and I do not believe that the man for whom I have been casting my ballot can at this late hour be successful.

"Now is your opportunity to prove whether you are men or are cattle, to be bought by the highest bidder. Name some man, I say, and prove your assertions. Who is he?"

Everybody listened as if expecting an answer, but none came, the members to whom upon burning remarks had been addressed continued to carry their half-ashamed, half-defiant look.

"Who is he?" repeated the speaker.

The silence became painful, but still no reply was forthcoming. Just as the awful pitch had been reached the point where it was unbearable, a shrill, sharp voice was heard.

"Why don't you elect Hines?"

This seemed to strike the popular chord, and a great hurrah for the old-time ex-governor went up from the majority side. The members who were supposed to have been purchased looked upon that cry as their salvation, and they, too, took it up.

When the din had subsided, Axtell raised his voice to its highest pitch and yelled to the clerk:

"Record my vote for Hines."

The excitement quieted a bit and the vote proceeded. Every man who had been elected with the majority cast his vote for the big-hearted exgovernor. At its conclusion, amid a deafening roar, the clerk announced the result: Hines, 48; Flaherty, 35.

With a shout the president announced the election of Hines, and then gave two sharp raps with his mahogany gavel.

The hour of midnight having arrived, I now declare this session adjourned sine die," he said.

An hour later, the house was practically deserted. All had gone except two or three members, who were still packing their belongings. A newsboy entered with the morning "Enterprise," telling all about the election of the senator. Each member remaining bought a copy, and the boy lingered a minute as he watched them tie up a number of large bundles of paper.

"Aint it funny that you fellers never thought about electing Hines until I hollered it out from the back corner of the lobby," he said.

The lawmakers looked at the ragged boy, but said nothing.

"Souvenir Collecting."

The carrying off of any small portable article from one's friends' houses or from hotels is reaching such proportions, under the name of "souvenir collecting," that soon chairs and tables and other pieces of heavy furniture will be the only things left untouched. Many women, so it seems, think nothing of bearing away a spoon, liqueur glass or even a sugar basin, to add to their collection—one might say, of stolen goods—which are triumphantly shown to their friends in cabinets especially made for this purpose.—London King.

Resuscitation of Drowned People.

The latest theory in connection with drowning is that no water enters the lungs, and that heat, properly applied, with artificial respiration, will resuscitate persons who have been under water an hour. This feat has been accomplished by the doctor who advances the theory.

Ancient Egyptian Kings.

Recent explorations in Egypt have unearthed the consecutive order of 17 kings, thus establishing a firm foundation for the investigation of Egyptian history.

SOME WONDERFUL CROPS IN WESTERN CANADA.

The Territorial Government Reports Show Results Beyond Belief.

Regina, Assiniboia, Canada, January 10th—At the Agricultural Statistics Branch of the Department of Agriculture for the Territories, reports are now being received from grain threshers throughout the Territories, for statistical purposes. The reports are somewhat delayed this year, owing to the extensive crop and the delay in getting it threshed. The Department of Agriculture is leading the way in a new departure, with regard to the collection of crop statistics. In the older provinces, crop estimates are based entirely on the opinion of persons interested in the grain business who ought to be, and no doubt are, well posted upon the probable yields. Still the reports are simply a matter of opinion, in which a mistake may easily be made. The Territorial Department, however, has adopted the system of returns of crops actually threshed, upon which to base their reports. The accuracy of the reports cannot, therefore, be gainsaid, for they represent a compilation of actual threshing results. In this connection, it might be mentioned that the Department is organizing a system of growing crop returns, which will be in operation next summer. The information thus obtained, with estimated acreage, will be available for business men, banks, railway companies, and other interests which have to discount the future in making provision for the conduct of their business.

The crop reports already to hand show some remarkable cases of abnormal development. In the Regina district, many returns are given of crops of wheat running from 40 to 45 bushels to the acre.

J. A. Snell, of Yorkton, threshed 28,000 bushels of oats from 450 acres, an average of 63 bushels per acre for a large acreage.

W. H. Motherwell, of Abernethy, threshed 2,600 bushels of wheat from a 50-acre field, an average of 53 bushels per acre.

In the Edmonton district, T. T. Hutchings threshed 728 bushels of wheat from a ten-acre plot, an average of nearly 73 bushels per acre.

S. Norman threshed 6,950 bushels of oats from 60 acres of land, an average of 116 bushels per acre.

The publication of the actual yields or grain threshed will likely open the eyes of the people to the great capabilities of the Western Canadian prairies.

"GLORY" OF A TITLE.

Americans Love the Distinction as Much as Any Foreigner.

It is interesting to note how the title that any member of an American family may acquire affects its luster over the whole family. They all bask in its radiance—assuming that a title sheds radiance and in spite of the fact that it only too often does not. A title's a title for a' that, seems to be the paraphrase among some of Uncle Sam's citizens, says the New York Sun. The fact that a Philadelphia girl who married the other day had beauty, money and position seemed to be of small moment. Her parents, even, were scarcely mentioned in the newspaper reports of the wedding. All other considerations were eclipsed by the other fact that her sister had married a titled foreigner, and not a very big title at that. In every published account the bride was described not as "daughter of Mr. and Mrs. ——," but as the "sister of the Countess ——." The fact that the marriage of this same countess' sister turned out most unhappily and that, finding it impossible to live with her husband, she was some years ago obliged to get a legal separation, counts for nothing. The title's the thing.

Threw His Canes Away.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 7th. Mr. C. I. Smith of 309 Anne St., the Secy. of the Trades Council has written this startling statement for publication.

"I feel it my duty to make public the facts of my recent illness and recovery. I was very sick and sore, and had to walk with the aid of two canes. It was very painful attack, but I don't know what it was. Some said it was Lumbago and others that it was Sciatica or Rheumatism.

"I was told to take Dodd's Kidney Pills, and began a treatment. After I had used one box I could walk with one cane, and after two boxes were used I could walk without any help. I kept on and three boxes cured me completely.

"I am now well and happy without a pain or an ache and I can very truly say that Dodd's Kidney Pills are worthy of my greatest praise."

THE AGE OF BRAINS.

Pertinent Ideas Advanced by a Writer in the Forum.

The late Philip D. Armour once told me that he did not give his sons a dollar's worth of stock in his immense business until they had satisfied him that they could "make sausage." This was the great packer's homely way of saying that he did not take his sons into the firm until they had shown business capacity and industry. But not many rich men in this country follow the example set by the founder of the great house of Armour. The young man with nothing but brains has nothing to lose. What to do with a patrimony of $100,000 does not bother him or keep him awake at night. The young man with $100,000 will soon realize that this is too small a sum to risk in business in an age of combines, when all productive and mercantile enterprises are conducted upon a scale of great magnitude. Manufacturing is certainly out of the question; and if he wants to embark in a mercantile pursuit, he must go to a small town that is not yet invaded by a mammoth department store selling everything from a tack hammer to "store teeth," says a writer in the Forum.

But the young man with nothing but brains is not confronted by such perplexities. There is no "trust" in brains. It may be possible to corner the wheat crop or control the yearly output of corn starch, but you cannot corner the crop of ideas. If the young man looks about him and studies the situation he will quickly learn that the age of combinations is also the age of brains.

CRANK INVENTORS.

They Often Make Great Discoveries that Others Fail to Grasp.

"I represent a big chemical concern in New York," said a well-known patent attorney, "and that concern is always on the lookout for improvements in their specialties. Their president said to me some years ago: 'If any fellow comes to you and claims to have a chemical process which is an improvement on any of our specialties, don't let him get away for want of a few dollars. No matter if he is drunk and in rags, find out what he knows and help him along if there is any chance of his making an improvement. He may be the undiscovered genius with a million dollar prize in his head.'

"So I always act on that principle and welcome the crank inventor with open arms. It has been a success, too. I have had experiences which made me repeat as a daily prayer what Herbert Spencer wrote: 'The vital knowledge which underlies our whole existence is a knowledge that has got itself taught in nooks and corners, while the organized agencies for teachings have been mumbling little else but dead formulas.'

"I hope this great Carnegie institute will put that sentence over its lintel as the motto and moving spirit of its life. If it does, it will be a greater instrument for the advancement of the human race than any university in the world."—Washington Post.

Exchange of Wit.

One day Dr. Parr, whose wit has lived a century after him, meeting Lord Erskine, with whom he was friendly, said: "Erskine, I mean to write your epitaph when you die." "Doctor," answered the great lawyer, "it is almost a temptation to commit suicide." This recalls another story. Gibbon, the historian, had a rival in a French physician for the favor of a titled lady, and the doctor was one day annoyed by Gibbon's monopolizing the lady's company. "When my Lady Elizabeth Foster is made ill by your twaddle," said the doctor in a loud tone, "I will cure her." "And when my Lady Elizabeth Foster is dead from your prescriptions," said the historian, "I will immortalize her."

American Drinks Abroad.

When the late Mike Woolf, the inimitable delineator of gamin life, was in London a half score of years ago he was attracted to a certain well-known hostelry by the sign, "American Drinks a Specialty." Approaching the polished mahogany he asked, to make sure:

"Do you have American mixed drinks?"

"Yes," said the suave servitor.

"All right," said Mike happily; make me a whisky cocktail."

"TIRED ALL THE TIME,"

Women in the Springtime Need a Tonic. Spring Fever is Spring Catarrh. Peruna Cures Catarrh.

A Beautiful Club Woman's Recovery.

Los Angeles, Cal., 536 S. Olive Street, May 5, 1901.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Gentlemen:—"I suffered with pain in my right side for over eight years. Doctors said my liver was affected. My complexion was dark and yellow, I had a bad taste in my mouth, and was tired all the time. I took a great deal of medicine, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I read in the paper of Peruna, and decided to give it a trial. I felt better before the first bottle was gone, and after taking three bottles I was cured, and I have enjoyed perfect health ever since."—LENA HILTON.

Miss Lena Hilton, is President of the Wednesday What Club, of Los Angeles.

AS a spring medicine Peruna is never failing remedy. It cleanses the blood through digestion, and gives tone to the whole system by increasing the nutritive value of the food. "Spring fever," as it is sometimes called, which proceeds a tired out, sleepy feeling, and inability to do much mental or physical work, is the result of a sluggish digestion.

The great popularity that Peruna has is due to the fact that in all such cases it at once corrects digestive derangements and enriches the blood by purifying this very important source of that vital fluid.

Mrs. J. E. Finn, 82 East High Street Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

"A few years ago I had to give up social life entirely, as my health was completely broken down. The doctor advised a complete change and rest for a year. As this was out of the question for a time, I began to look around for other means of restoring my health.

"I had often heard of Peruna as an excellent tonic, so I bought a bottle to see what it would do for me, and it certainly took hold of my system and rejuvenated it, and in less than two months I was in perfect health, and now when I feel worn out or tired a dose or two of Peruna is all that I need."

MRS. J. E. FINN.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you valuable advice gratis.
