

"Pe-ru-na is All You Claim For It"

Congressman D. F. Wilber, of Ohio, N. Y. writes: The Peru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O. Gentlemen--Peru-na is a friend I have tried your remedy and I have almost fully recovered after the use of a few bottles. I am fully convinced that Peru-na is all you claim for it, and I would heartily recommend your medicine to all who are afflicted with catarrh trouble. --DAVID F. WILBER.

Others who are similarly afflicted to try Peru-na are: Mr. C. P. Givan, Ruler, N. B. Vice President of The Fastest Loading Club, who writes: "Whenever the cold weather sets in I have for years past been very sick to take a severe cold which was hard to get over, and which would have serious effects on my constitution the most of the winter." Last winter I was advised to try Peru-na, and within five days the cold was broken and in five days more I was a well man. I have recommended it to several of my friends and all speak the highest praise for it. There is nothing like Peru-na for catarrh affections. It is well worth trying. As a cure, and I gladly endorse it. --C. P. Givan.

Give New Life and Strength. Mr. Edward Laws, Crown Point, Ind., writes the following: "I must tell you what a grand help Peru-na has been to me. For over two years I suffered with catarrh of the lungs and throat, and although I doctored for it, with all kinds of medicine, it did not do me any good. I was very weak, and I could not do any work. I was advised to try Peru-na, and within five days the cold was broken and in five days more I was a well man. I have recommended it to several of my friends and all speak the highest praise for it. There is nothing like Peru-na for catarrh affections. It is well worth trying. As a cure, and I gladly endorse it. --C. P. Givan.

"And hecombs of doves were slain upon the altars of Aphrodite, for the Greeks admitted this goddess as lover, great and made daily sacrifices to her." The student leaned back and closed his eyes unthinkingly. Her fingers grazed his forehead, and he opened his eyes, gazing at her. "In these later days we sacrifice not only doves, but eagles," she murmured dreamily. "Then with such a murderer as you, love which monstrosities are committed daily in your name--murder of mind and moral life! After life looks and breathes from your breast?" Her brows knitted slowly and again that odd smile crept to her lips.

Two years ago Helen Nord had found herself alone in the world. That she was penniless had not troubled her. She knew of a place where she could live on ten dollars a month and save money. Moreover she fancied that she could go to that place and make the ten dollars. It was in the fine Harvard of south Mississippi. There were a couple of small public schools there, lying a few miles apart, one of which was taught in summer and one in winter, each having a term of four months and paying about a hundred dollars per term. When she had made up her mind to go, she had for information, he gave her besides a bit of advice three bits: "Teach the schools here, keep your mouth shut, don't be with the girls, and be a heart." She thanked him, feeling the advice to be sound, and went away to it.

As a teacher, go, she had been successful. She held her schools against all rivals and had a hundred dollars in bank; and her pupils, without the least exception, were steady and successful. For two years she had labored at six dollars per month, dressed plain, worked hard, and studied. She had gratified her heart's desire and was a happy girl. It was a very good thing, and she had not done it for nothing. Her heart was glad, and she had not done it for nothing. Her heart was glad, and she had not done it for nothing.

Two years of Eden and, lo, the serpent. She had paid most attention when he first entered her garden. Only by degrees had it dawned upon her that he was like young David, strong of body and with a rosy complexion, good to look upon. Later on she noted that he neither drank nor smoked; that he kept his nails in order and was always neat. He lived at the house where she boarded, and brought her mail from the faraway port of office. He was always polite, was this peculiarly distant, and his presence troubled the fair young teacher. Vaguely he interfered with her studies, and she resented the interference.

But the sunset glow was fading while she dreamed of Aphrodite and her doves. What was Aphrodite to do? Or the doves? Unlucky melancholy birds that made even the glad pine-trees mournful with their plaintive cooing. Helen laughed a little as she put away her much-loved books and went out into the bold fresh air that delightful half hour between the lights.

She threw back her tired shoulders and drank in deep breaths of vigor. Glorious in the reckless pride of youth. Standing between the fading sunset glow and the brightening gleam of the rising moon. Appropriating the grandeur and understanding nothing of it. In the light tipped pines only glorified pride. Blind to the serenity that is born of suffering, deaf to the note of sadness that thrilled through their melodious chanting--her only a burst of deep-throated triumph.

Oddly enough, in the midst of these shabby vibrations of her soul came the practical reflection: "I can live on ten dollars a month and save money, and I can make the ten dollars. She stropped her eyes from the pine crests and saw Donica before her.

"I'll send some mail for you at the office, Miss Helen." He spoke with a slight accent in a voice deep toned and musical. Helen started and her nerves quivered. "Oh, thank you so much," she took the mail and her hands touched, but she tried not to see. "Thank you so much," she repeated, with tense civility. "Not talk," he returned, lifting his hat and moving away. He was every inch a man was M. Donica, in spite of his predilection for blushing.

Helen started down at the little packet of mail and saw instead a little cottage furnished cozily with that hundred dollars that must be otherwise. Then she laughed an echo of her own, a slight laugh with which she had put away her books, and struck a light. She had forgotten her mail. Presently a crisp bit of paper

"The student leaned back and closed her book unthinkingly." that it formed a solid foundation for a temple that must be otherwise. She had remained chimerical. For an hour she struggled with it, sitting in the dark in her little ten room. Then she laughed an echo of her own, a slight laugh with which she had put away her books, and struck a light. She had forgotten her mail. Presently a crisp bit of paper

HEALTH AND ALL ITS BLESSINGS

Health will come with all its blessings to those who know the way, and it is mainly a question of right-living, with all the terms implied, but the efforts which strengthen the system, the games which refresh and the food which nourish are important, each in a way, while it is also advantageous to have knowledge of the best methods of promoting freedom from unsatisfactory conditions. To assist nature, when nature needs assistance, it is all important that the medicinal agents used should be of the best quality and of known value, and the one remedy which acts most beneficially and pleasantly, as a laxative, is Syrup of Figs--manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

With a proper understanding of the fact that many physical ills are of a transient character and yield promptly to the gentle action of Syrup of Figs, gladness and comfort come from the thought that the most advanced in years may use it whenever a laxative is needed and share alike in its beneficial effects. We do not claim that Syrup of Figs is the only remedy known value, but it possesses this great advantage over all other laxatives that it acts gently and pleasantly without disturbing natural functions, in any way, as it is free from every objectionable quality or substance. To get its beneficial effects it is always necessary to buy the genuine and the full name of the Co.--California Fig Syrup Co.--is printed on the front of every package.
