ENGLAND'S MOST ELIGIBLE BACHELORS WILL AMERICAN GIRLS WIN ANY OF THEM?

THE DUKE OF ROXBURGHE.

EARL OF DALHOUSIE.

COLONEL LORD ALGERNON PERCY

If American heiresses choose to traverse a well established and much commented upon custom by inaugurating a series of vigorous matrimonial conquests among the sons of great houses of the old world instead of waiting for these titled personages to come to them, there seems to be no reason why their efforts in a matrimonial way should not be crowned by success of the most gratifying sort. Foremost in the rank of eligible sons comes the Duke of Roxburghe, who has been implicated by rumor in more engagements than any other one man in England, yet who has escaped them all and has arrived at bachelorhood possessed of a good many alluring attainments and natural qualifications to say nothing of his wealth and position. The future Duchess of Roxburghe will be a fortunate woman, for the duke is brainy, pluckly, good looking, and possessed of a pleasing manner. In addition he has seen service in war, which is something of a distinction in England.

Lord Percy is another great part. The future Duke of Northumberland would in any case be a personage, and in this case exceptional cleverness is added to great position and fortune. Lord Percy is an earnest politician, of whom the world has heard much and expects to hear more. The name of Lord Graham who will be Duke of Montrose one day, springs naturally to the lips when speaking of Lord Percy. His talents are no less obvious, but run in other grooves. He is fiercely Gaelic, and adorns the kilt which he loves; he is one of the ablest of youthful lecturers, and has traveled wide and far. He has more than a budding acquaintance with the army and navy, and has lately returned from South Africa. Finally, and as beehoves the son of one of the most beautiful women in society, he is good looking. Mr. Niall Campbell, the son of Lord Archibald, is not often heard of, but his wife, when he chooses her, may look forward to being Duchess of Argyll.

Lord Dalhousie is another youthful warrior and bachelor. He is handsome and by no means badly off. Lord Bute is still too young to be reckoned in the list, but men of his family marry early. He is a Catholic, and the fact must materially limit his choice when it comes to his marrying. Of the same ancient faith is Lord Lovat. His family is accounted the handsomest in Scotland. Lord Mansfield is older than any of the others mentioned, but the most confirmed bachelors change their minds. His possessions include a veritable ancient and royal palace, two other country seats, a beautiful place in Hampstead, over which the speculative builder vainly sighs, and a house in St. James' place.

Lord Leconfield, the host at the season's prettiest ball is one of the most popular of young men. Lord Lansdowne has an elder son, Lord Kerry, and Lord Ronaldshay, who is Lord Zetland's heir, is not to be overlooked. Lord Arran is 34, and, like every one else, has been in the war, and, unlike most, he has written in the Nineteenth Century. Lord Fincastle has the Victoria Cross, and already he has done much for fame.

Jefferson Memorial Arch

The arch to be erected in Monroe park at Richmond, Va., to the memory of Jefferson Davis, was designed by Louis A. Gudebrod of New York.

The completed arch will have a height of 65 feet, a width of 70 feet and a breadth of 24 feet. The archway is to be 25 feet wide and 40 feet high in the clear. The entire arch is to be constructed of the finest Southern granite, and to have an interior stairway leading to the top. The sculptor has adopted the Corinthian style of architecture as being most in harmony with the prevailing style in the South, as well as especially adapted to express the purposes of the arch.

Two bronze figures are to be placed on either end of the arch, and will be symbolical of Fame and the "Lost Cause," and are to be more than twice life size.

The sculptor has endeavored to express in his work the life of Jefferson Davis, as well as to perpetuate the ideals and principles which he represented. To this end the two bronze statues represent Fame and the "Lost Cause."

In the spandrels, two on each side of the arch will be placed four basreliefs, representing Glory, Truth, Justice and Valor. These further illustrate Mr. Davis' life as connected with his people. The figure Glory represents the glory won by Jefferson Davis and the people of the Confederate States during the most trying period of their history. The figure Truth represents their united devotion to the cause which they championed. Justice represents the unswerving belief in the righteousness of their cause and the justice of the struggle; Valor represents the many deeds of heroism of Jefferson Davis and his people both in their homes and in the field. The thirteen seals in the attic represent the Confederate States, the central one being the seal of Virginia, while upon the five low relief panels in the attic and upon the two panels in the archway will be inscribed such tributes to Jefferson Davis as may be chosen by the committee.

'TWAS COLD IN OPEN WORK.

But the Jersey Girls Found a Way and Kept as Warm as Toast.

Some of the young folks of Newark have a way of staying so late at Coney Island on Sunday nights in summer that they have to trolley across the Jersey salt meadows to their homes in the wee sma' hours of Monday morning. Last Sunday was no exception.

In the throng that just comfortably filled one of the night owl cars from Jersey City to Newark were many women who had started out from ten to twelve hours earlier wearing their new open work finery, says the New York Sun. It was an open car, and the damp breezes that blew in soon made the white arms and shoulders which peeped through the lace and gauze blue and shivery.

On the front seat, exposed to all the fierceness of the blast, sat a little brunette, the openness of whose waist was proportioned to the prettiness of its owner. She was a born leader, as the event soon proved.

Rising from her seat and bracing her feet so that no sudden jolt should make her seem infirm of purpose or understanding, she turned and cast a defiant look at the fifty or sixty persons who were watching. Then she gathered up her skirt with both hands, raised it to a level with her spreading picture hat, folded it warmly about her neck and sat down.

"Well, waddeye think o' that?" came in a suppressed murmur from half the men in the car.

"It's a good idea," replied one of the girls only less determined than the pioneer skirt-raiser on the front seat.

The rest of the women with purple arms and shoulders thought so, too, and for the next five minutes there was a spreading of sail and a fluttering of petticoat such as even Jersey has seldom witnessed.

Camel's Skeleton Found in Ohio.

An odd discovery was made by some workmen who are building the western extension of Temple street, Washington Court House, Ohio. They unearthed near the residence of Milton Burnett the well-preserved skeleton of a camel. The bones are in a well-preserved state, and have been seen by a large number of people.

All the bones have been found, with the exception of the upper part of the head, or upper jaw. The neck bone is four feet long and tne ribs meet at the top in a doubie dome-shaped combination, while the odd shaped bones of the hind legs, with the large, bony lump at the hock joint, are there in all their grotesqueness.

There is no explanation of how the animal got there unless it belonged to a circus in the days of long ago and died while the show had its tents pitched in that city, and was buried; or, perhaps, it was one of the original aboriginal camels of Fayette county—one of the first settlers as it were, of which no one has been able to find an account in the early history of Fayette county.

OREGONIAN IN NEW YORK.

His Interesting Experiences in the Eastern Metropolis.

An old Portlander, who has been traveling in the east for several weeks, has returned. He has concluded that New York city is too rapid in every way for him.

He was returning from a suburban resort to the city one day and saw a bad tough knocked out by a lady. The contemptible hound had snuggled up to one lady so close that she left the train, and he then crowded up against another lady and acted very rudely. She pulled out one of her hatpins and jabbed it clean through his leg above the knee. He gave an agonized yell and got out of the car as quickly as possible, and just fell off the platform.

After reaching the city the Portlander took the street car to go to his hotel. An old man who sat near him signaled to the conductor and got off the car on the wrong side. A vast trench had been blasted out in the center of the street, in which a subway is to be constructed. This trench is thirty feet in depth, and the old man stepped from the car down into it. He was picked up and thrown into a "bucket" in which rock is hoisted out, the engine went "chu, chu, chu," and he was brought to the surface on a run; an ambulance drove up, he was thrown in and taken away to a hospital, and the car proceeded.

The Oregonian was perfectly safe, filled with his experience of life in New York and does not hanker for any more of it.—Portland Oregonian.

WERE ROUGH ON OATS.

All That the Western Farmer Knew of "Em'grants."

United States Senator Henry M. Teller, of Colorado, who entered with much spirit into the recent debate on the Philippine tariff bill, is proud of the achievements of the Rocky Mountain states and loves to tell stories of the vigorous frontiersmen who blazed the trail for American empire, says the Philadelphia Post.

One story is of a farming community that had established itself on the sunset side of the Rockies. A number of farmers had gathered around the stove at the village grocery, and one of the company was reading aloud from a newspaper.

"There will be a big swarming of emigrants toward the west, the paper stated, eats had become so scarce that the price had gone up in Chicago to $2 a bushel.

"What's em'grants?" interrupted a farmer.

A significant silence demonstrated that the query had stumped the community. Finally the grocer, whose reputation as the infallible oracle of the countryside was at stake, spoke up.

"I don't know zactly what these geeky em'grants is," explained that worthy man, "but I know they're powerful destructive on oats."

Approved of the Distinction.

A certain American writer of international repute, who has been recently wed, like so many other geniuses, strangely incapable of managing his own domestic affairs. The small boy of the family was his father's pet, but the terror of the rest of the household. Now it happened that under this same roof with this small boy lived to maiden aunts, sisters of his mother. That they were thorns in his flesh he made no pretense of concealing. On one occasion when he had overstepped a bit farther than usual the bounds of propriety in addressing his relatives, his Aunt Julia appeared before his father to state the case. Her nephew had called her a fool, while his Aunt Martha he had characterized as a mere fool. The young offender was summoned to the paternal presence. Fixing him with his eye the father demanded:

"Did you call young Aunt Julia a fool?"

"Yes."

"Did you call your Aunt Martha a —— fool?"

"Yes."

"My son," was the prompt reply, "that is exactly the distinction I should make myself."

All in the Family.

"I had business in the far west last winter," said a Boston lawyer the other day, "and while I was stopping in a small town for a day or two a man was tried for stealing a horse. I went over to the court to see how they put things through, and closely followed the evidence on both sides. There wasn't the shadow of a doubt in my mind that the prisoner was guilty, and that evening I said to his lawyer:

"'You'll lose your case to-morrow. The jury must certainly convict.'

"'I don't know,' he replied.

"'You don't hope to get him off, do you?'

"'Maybe not, but there'll surely be a disagreement.'

"'I shouldn't count on that if I had the case.'

"'But I do, you know,' he replied. 'I've got two brothers-in-law on the jury and you don't suppose they are going back on their kin do you?'

"They didn't," laughed the narrator. "Next day the case was closed, and the jury disagreed."

Must Have Been Paregoric.

"Recent legislative action," said Representative Olmstead of Pennsylvania, "reminds me of a client of mine the necessities of whose large family, recently augmented by twins, made him poor. He came to me joyfully one day and said he had found oil flowing from a spring on his land.

"The bottle containing the sample which he brought me had evidently been family use, but I forwarded it to an expert for analysis. The reply dashed to the earth the hopes of my client and myself. The expert said:

"'Find no trace of oil. Think your friend has struck paregoric.'"

Where Cats Are Valuable.

Owing to a plague of rats and mice, cats sell at $25 a piece in North Yukon Territory.

You can bottle up the truth for a time, but it eventually pops the cork.

The Voice of Jenny Lind.

It would seem that the mantle of the illustrious Jenny Lind, who was known as the Swedish Nightingale, has fallen upon her grandaughter, Miss Gwendolin Maude. It is said that her rendition of the songs by the masters has won the admiration of the critics of Europe. Jenny Lind left one daughter, who, although she did not possess the voice of her mother, was a writer of charming songs. It appears that the great singer's talent passed over one generation to remain the gift of the grandaughter.

Cost of Battleships.

Twenty years ago (1883) a British battleship cost about $2,400,000; the Admiral class (1889) cost about $3,600,000; the Royal Sovereign class (1892-95) cost about $4,200,000; the Majestic (1895-98) cost $4,400,000; the Formidable and the Duncan (1901) cost more than $5,000,000; the King Edward VII., the Dominion and the Commonwealth, now building, will have displacements of about 16,350 tons and will cost about $6,400,000.

World's Biggest Sailing Ship.

Germany has the largest sailing vessel in the world, the Preussen, of 8,000 tons, just launched at Geestemunde. She is owned by the firm that owns the former largest sailing vessel the Potosi, of 5,000 odd tons, and will be used in the trade with the Pacific coast of America. The Preussen is 437 feet long and 53 feet wide. She draws 34 feet and has a spread of sail of 48,000 square feet.

King's American Name.

Numerous inquiries are being made as to what would be King Edward's name if he had the honor of being a citizen of the United States. His mother's name was Guelph and she married a man whose family name was Wettin. Therefore should his majesty ever decide to become a citizen of this country his papers would be made out to Albert E. Wettin.

A Question of Robes.

When President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell formally received Lord Rosebery at Ithaca he caused considerable favorable comment by wearing the scarlet robe and black velvet cap which his degree of doctor of laws from the University of Edinburgh entitles him to wear. President Schurman will probably wear the robe at all future academic functions.

Sensible Pianos for Children.

Half-size pianos are made on the continent for the use of children who are learning to play. Doctors declare that much permanent injury is done to the muscles of the fingers by reaching to stretch an octave or more, so that the new pianos are made with the keys half the usual width in order to prevent such injury.

Curious Plague Disappears.

The Province of Gujarat in the Bombay presidency has during the first few months of the year from a plague of rats, which infested hedges and fields, and even at the newly sown grain. Now, however, they have suddenly disappeared in an unaccountable manner.

A Suburban Gentleman.

This definition of a gentleman was provided by a suburban butcher. He was asked for some details concerning a man who had just left his shop. "What, 'im sir?" he replied. "Oh, 'es a reg'lar gentleman. 'E don't go up to London every day."—London Globe.

The woman who comprehends the eternal fitness of things wears on a hot day a gown that boasts of no trimming.
