MILITARY MASS AT SEA.

Most Impressive of all Shipboard Ceremonials.

By long odds the most impressive of the ceremonies that occur on shipboard is the military mass on Sunday. Nothing less than a full cathedral service for Catholics, yet the attendance of all sorts, sailors, officers and cassuals. The afterhatch on the gun deck is cleared and an altar erected there with various of the fitments pertaining to the service. A large American flag partitions off the space behind it and also conceals the band that is the organ in this function, accompanying the priest in the intonations and playing during the offertory. The priest is in full canonicals, and is a wonderful spot of color as he kneels under the opening where the light falls. Before the hatch, forming three sides of a square, are the marines, standing silently, like trees bending together in the wind. They are in full uniform with fixed bayonets and are at attention.

A sailor in white is altar boy, and the choir, on the front seats in the audience, consists in this instance of newspaper men, the least terrible in a collection of voices that would not be accepted by Mr. Grau. At the elevation of the host the drums give a ruffle and the marines present arms, the flag advanced, while all in front bow. And at the end, after a short and practical sermon by the chaplain, the band plays "America" and all join in the singing of it, says Brooklyn Eagle. It is to be noted that in this service the hymns are not those of the Roman church, but are such things as "Abide With Me," "Rock of Ages," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Coronation," since these are better known to the majority who sing them than are the masses.

Death of Famous Elephant.

Advices from Tours, France, give an account of the death of the gigantic elephant Fritz, which belonged to Barnum's show, which recently visited that place. The circus, which had given a two days' performance in Tours, was making its final parade through the streets. When the Place Nicolas-Pruneau was reached Fritz with a mighty effort, freed himself from his chains, rose on his hind legs, trumpeting loudly, and causing a panic among the crowd. Fortunately two keepers managed to entangle his feet with ropes, but this only increased the animal's fury, and he struggled violently, snapping two large trees. After some exciting moments he was brought to the ground and securely bound. The authorities were notified of the occurrence, and a picket of infantry was sent to stop all traffic on the place. The circus proprietors eventually decided that Fritz should be killed. Cables, pulleys and windlasses were brought and the huge brute was strangled. The body has been offered to the Tours Museum.

Our Master.

Immortal love, for ever full,
For ever flowing free,
For ever shared, for ever whole,
A never-ebbing sea!

No fable old, nor mythic lore,
Nor dream of bards and seers,
No dead fact stranded on the shore
Of the oblivious years.

But warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He;
And faith has still its Olivet,
And love its Galilee.

The healing of His seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again.

Our Friend, our Brother, and our Lord,
What may Thy service be?
Nor name, nor form, nor ritual word,
But simply following Thee.

Thy litanies, sweet offices
Of love and gratitude;
Thy sacramental liturgies,
The joy of doing good.

—John G. Whittier.

BIRMINGHAM AND COLUMBUS BUNCOED

With Compliments to Ashley & Dustin.

Just one word for the steamer Frank E. Kirby, "the fiver of the lakes." Without this fancy, durable craft there would be no pleasure in a visit to dear old Put-In-Bay. For service, excellent cuisine, unexcelled, gentlemanly attendants, there is no superior in steamboating upon the lakes. NIT.

For grossness, inability, lack of courtesy, the officers of this craft are the limit; for robbing methods in restaurant there is no rival.

There ought to be something done to the bogg-geman, he is the worst ever happened; absolutely without the first vestige of gentlemanly instinct. Just a plain everyday baggage smasher, and yet—why, why, saffron isn't in it with him. If you want the "marble" and want it right, just approach the person and ask him some innocent question, such as the company's demand for transportation from Detroit to Sandusky, and watch him swell up and burst with indignation and unsuppressed anger. Just ask him, see, and then run for your life, for if you don't the ruffian is liable to brain you for your impudence.

Oh yes, let's see, the steward, the big, fat, gross individual that notifies the passengers to be at the doors of the dining room ten minutes before serving commences and then would not allow them inside because meals were not ready, also brow beats weak and inoffensive women because they dare complain and tells them to go away and "chew the rag" with some one besides him.

By all means, kind friends, take the Kirby, the yellow Kirby, and experience the pleasure of a day at Put-In-Bay, and you are assured the next time you want to make the journey you will stay at home on business.

It is assumed that the captain is all right but we certainly did not see him, because no officer of this craft gave courteous treatment to any of our party.

We are informed that the crap shooting department of this company was thoroughly aired in Saturday's Detroit Daily Tribune and feel warranted in saying that now we think the reason they wouldn't serve our party any meals was because the help was anxious to get in the game.

The Gospel of Smiles.

Did you ever try the gospel of smiles? A smile is the sunbeam of the soul. It lights up the eyes and transfigures the countenance. A frown is easier, but it gives no light. Open the soul windows and let in the light, and keep those windows open; then let out that light in smiles. A smile can scatter gloom and silver line a cloud. It costs little, but it counts for much. Tears and smiles live near together. Dry your tears, and scatter your smiles!

A Cheaper Method.

Cato had just finished a speech with the usual words, "Carthage must be destroyed."

"Why not," suggested a senator, "capitalize a company and offer to build them a rapid transit subway?"

The Romans were well pleased with the idea, for they realized how thoroughly the city would be devastated. The expense, however, seemed too great, so they sent over Scipio with his army and did a cheap and effectual job.

THOUGHTS FOR EVERY DAY.

Consider well before you try to do what all those who have gone before you have failed to do.

Waiting for circumstances to so adjust themselves that action will project itself into fulfillment is one of the most insidious forms of idleness.

The successful man is one who makes his own circumstances, or, when finding this impossible, reckons what he has of independent circumstances and so adapts himself that he may be one with them.

Cigars for Crowned Heads.

Making cigars for princes and potentates and crowned heads is a great business in Havana. It is a good advertising feature. It gives the cigarmakers a prestige which they cannot get in any other way. King Edward has his cigars specially made. All the cigars that are made for crowned heads by Cuban manufacturers are bought by the men they are made for, and scrupulous care is exercised in the matter. The only men who ever get any of these cigars either get them on orders from royal personages or they get them as guests of the royalty. A particular kind of tobacco is used in the manufacture of these cigars. Take the case, for instance, of the czar of Russia. Cigars that are made for him are branded with the Russian coat of arms, and he buys all the cigars the factory can make out of the material and in the way specified by his order.

Jumped Into Engine Stack.

A dispatch from Joplin, Mo., says: Owen Greelish, of Leavenworth, Kas., was killed between Lebanon and Springfield by jumping into the tunnel of the locomotive smoke stack on the west bound St. Louis and San Francisco passenger train. The dispatch says the young man committed suicide. He climbed to the top of the water tank and when the train stopped jumped into the smoke stack whooping as he leaped. He was pulled out by the train crew horribly burned and died in a few moments. His body was taken to Lebanon. Greelish's brother, in this city, knows nothing of the details, but denies that the death was suicidal. He says that he received a postal the day before and that his brother did not seem dejected or liable to kill himself.
