

And so three Harle left only $1,000. Impenitence to the last!

If it wasn't for ally being the fox would not have his reputation.—Life.

They are writing German poetry about Kipling. This is a terrible revelation.

Mr. Morgan tells us that Noah organizes the first trust. And he waters his stock, too.

Late dispatches from London bring the news that Editor W. T. Stead's grouch is still on.

Royalties on Wagner's opera last year paid $115,000. Yet some European royalties never pay.

Spain has no other statesman the size of Don Praxedo Mateo Sagasta, now, unhappily, deceased.

The king of Portugal is an expert cock. It may be therefore that it is a hero even to the hired girl.

Even with his fear of $200,000 in gifts in 1912, we recall Mr. Carnegie is richer than he was a year ago.

In spite of all the praise it has taken in, the new cable to Hawaii is working as industriously as a veteran.

The French balloonists who are going to try to cross the wastes of Sahara in balloons surely do not lack for sand.

Henry Waterson says the smart set shows no inclination to take the cold seriously.

Cast did not feel like apologizing, and if one enters fully into his claims one cannot blame him for being a trifle reluctant.

Abdul Hamid seems to have overlooked the fact that when a Darda net has once been opened it is a very hard thing to shut.

A spring in Virginia is so magnetic that it chases everything dropped into it which is somewhat resembles Kentucky colic.

The news that the Jews appear to hold the balance of power in Persia makes pleasant reading in view of recent events in Roumania.

The life of a Japanese Jirikisha man is said to be only five years. This shows that in some cases a pull is the worst thing a man can have.

Bret Harle left an estate valued at $1,800,000 as much as a captain of industry can have in twenty minutes when conditions are ordinarily favorable.

It seems to be generally allowed that the gorgeous scene on the plains at Delhi has never been surpassed by any spectacular performance on any modern stage.

A New York boy found a gold brick in Wall street the other day. Let us hope, however, that it will not result in a general hunt for Wall street gold bricks.

A New York girl asked seven young men to take her to the theater, just as a joke. But she took the entire seven and paid the freight we fall to see the laughing point.

Max Nordau inclines to the view that the American people are also degenerate in this opinion. He is in accord with his theory that degeneracy has overtaken everybody except him self.

Peru and Bolivia have decided to arbitrate their boundary dispute. Both countries probably have so many revolutions going on that they can't afford to bother with an ordinary war.

The powers have begun warning China. If China will apply to the United States she may be willing to furnish some information concerning the waiting business that will be highly reassuring.

It appears that some of the life insurance companies have been paying taxes on some of Henry Green's property by mistake. Let us hasten to explain that Henry made no complaint on account of the error.

Some comment has been excited by the action of the Chicago gentleman who shot his horse and died. The truth probably is that the paternal one deemed it more advisable to shoot the youth than to support him.

A man who amassed a fortune of $100,000 as a result of twenty years of industrious begging has died in Canada. The chances are that he'll have to beg a lot more before St. Peter lets him through the pearly gates.

When the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones declares that the chating dish is the greatest humbug ever brought into a man's home he forgets the excuse that he had's been for one played down with him when he comes in late.

Indiana has a population of 1,500, two banks, electric lights, and water works and probably thirty-five business houses, including a big factory. But the city's been for one played down with him when he comes in late.
