A BOOR AND A BAIT.

By FRANK H. SWEET. (Copyright, 1908, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Plug—the name had usurped and smothered any other which might have been more rightfully his in the forgotten days—was filling the wood-box, slouching over it and dropping the sticks one by one. He was in no hurry, for that was not his way; and moreover, he was just now afraid to face the kitchen leers, which some of the leers were slanted and rendered ineffectual by striking his back.

amazement of the kitchen, his gaze roved squarely and then down with an odd, challenging glance of triumph, finally circling round to the second floor at the sink, where it softened. But only for a moment, then it came back to Carrots, and the peculiar, grotesque face twisted itself into the most horrible contortion of which it was capable.
