

SONG

As in a room a single rose
Makes fragrant every part...

For, as the earth without it flowers
And birds were dead...

HER OWN SWEET SELF
By H. HEMANS HERLEY

A man was sitting in the comfortable parlor of a modern uptown residence...

"Now for a song," he muttered,
bracing himself as for a trying ordeal...

"Money, money, money; good heavens, Wynn, how you can get away with it..."

"Disobey!" he burst forth,
"I should say it has. It's turned out just as I have long expected..."

"What a man makes her!" he echoed, "why, woman, have I caused
you to make a pauper of me?"

"Your extravagance has ruined us," his wife said, "no one can know what anguish swayed her heart..."

WHAT BESS HAD WRITTEN.

Message No. Exactly. What Father Had Written.
"Who's that?" said the old gentleman...

"Well, did you attend to that matter, Bess?" said the gentleman
at breakfast next morning.

HE TOOK THE HINT
Also His Hat and Coat, and Silently Departed.

"Why not?" he asked, glaring at
the clock, which was marking the hour
of eleven o'clock...

The Kiss.
We were with the mother.
Through the passage door of June...

Womanlike, she burst into tears
the total with a receipt which was among the papers the lawyer had given her...

"Why, Wynn?" he exclaimed, "what are you doing here? This is no place for you..."

"What a man makes her!" he echoed, "why, woman, have I caused
you to make a pauper of me?"

"What the devil do you call that?"
Every student of grammarian trembled with sympathy and approval...

How Very Pathetic

"Thank you, Mrs. Cutler," she said
"My little visit has done me a world of good. I can go away now in a much better condition of mind..."

"I am awfully sorry to disturb you,"
she said, "I thought Mr. McClellan was still here. He lived here five years ago. I lived with him..."

"I don't care," she said, glancing at
the clock, which was marking the hour
of eleven o'clock...
