SEVEN GIRLS EAT RAT POISON

Children Enjoy a Stolen Lunch and Two of Them Are Dead.

New Orleans, La., Oct. 5.—Rebelle because the children they had evaded the rule forbidding the children to eat between meals, seven little orphans of the St. John's asylum stole some pieces of bread smeared over with rat poison and ate them. Two are now dead and the other five are in the charity hospital lingering between life and death. They are, respectively, aged 9, and Sarah Wilkinson, aged 6, and the two who have already died. The asylum is conducted by the Sisters. One of the nuns is that there shall be no eating between meals. The children like to steal out "snacks" and enjoy them. So when these seven little girls found mice, fresh slices of bread lying all around, with a thick paste spread over them looking like jelly and with sugar sprinkled on them they devoured them with a relish. The paste was deadly poison.

His life is told of an old lady who has lived all her life in Germantown as have generations of her family. The other day she is said to have consulted a young physician fresh from his honors at the University of Pennsylvania.

"What do you think is the matter with me?" asked the lady.

"I am inclined to think your blood is not pure, madam. It is full of poisons. You are probably not aware that you are suffering from the oldest families in Philadelphia."

"The only good size digger manufactured. We guarantee it to do all that is claimed. The Hoover digger is the only one that separates the roots from the potato and other food matter. The roots are being delivered behind the machine in a trough on one side, while the weeds are carried to the left side, the dirt set of roots being on the other with the aid of specially moving bars. It saves you from the trouble of digging and sorting when having a digger. It you wish a machine that will not overburden, or cause, weeds and potatoes over together, use straw over the straw carrier, don't get the straw on top of the potatoes."
