FOLEY'S

When your lungs are sore and inflamed from coughing, it is the time when the germs of PNEUMONIA, PLEURISY and CONSUMPTION find lodgment and multiply.
stops the cough, heals and strengthens the lungs. It contains no harsh expectorants that strain and irritate the lungs, or opiates that cause constipation, a condition that retards recovery from a cold. FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR is a safe and never failing remedy for all throat and lung troubles.
The Doctors Said He Had Consumption—A Marvelous Cure.
L. M. Hughes, Rochester, Wis., writes: "I once said I had consumed and I got no better until I used FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR. It helped me right from the start and stopped the spitting of blood and the pain in my lungs and today I am sound and well."
THREE SIZES 25c, 50c, and $1.00.

The Eminent Kidney and Bladder Specialist.
The Discoverer of Swamp-Root at Work in His Laboratory.
There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because it is deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by this disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney, poisoned blood will attack the vital organs of the body—the kidneys break down and waste away cell by cell. Then the center of the blood—the kidneys—leak out and the sufferer has Bright's Disease, the worst form of kidney trouble.
Dr. Klinger's Swamp-Root is the only discoverer of Swamp-Root in his laboratory. It is the only medicine that has been proven to cure kidney trouble. It is the only medicine that has been proven to cure kidney trouble. It is the only medicine that has been proven to cure kidney trouble.
For every headache, pounding, dot, was put on der market dare say a dozen Scotch highballs turned loose to even matters up.
A politician was different from a human being because he has to be hit with a ax before he will admission dot he is licked.
Der most of us would be so thankful for der things we haf if we was no dof busy reaching outd for der things we dink we want.
Spoonbills tells me dot science has eggsploined all dem ideas about superstition and proved id by carrying a potato in his pocket to vorry his rheumatism.
Sabine, the Baroness de Montclair, who will soon change her name, as you have heard, was a young widow of Paris, pretty, witty and above all things, wise, for though but four and twenty years of age, she had known how from the very beginning of her "weeds" to express her grief fittingly, without exaggeration and yet to avoid the gossip's charge.
"All that crepe but hides a red bandkerchief."
Promptly with the appearance of the first April sun the Baroness departed from her apartment in the Rue Bienfaisance, where no visitor of the male sex had dared set foot since a week to unearth her whereabouts, concealed from all the world—Villade de Sycamore, Chantilly.
Promptly with the beam of the first May sun I followed her. Precisely and without leave or license, my only excuse a devoted love of no matter how many years' standing. He that risks nothing gains nothing.
Of Sabine's anger when I presented myself at her gate within an hour of my arrival I prefer not to speak.
"Ah! mon Dieu!" she sighed, "to what is a poor woman exposed deprived of protection? You would never have dared to do this had my husband been alive! You, his best friend, too! Poor Antoine!"
I sighed in unison.
"Poor Antoine, indeed! We will talk of him together."
"Never! Never!"
"We will talk of ourselves then, I should like that better!"
Words that caused her so much irritation, it took me at least an hour to set foot in her house again, which she made under protest. I broke the next morning, and every morning thereafter that Sabine would permit.
And the day Sabine left off crepe entirely, I prepared by the occasion, naturally enough, it seemed to me—to squarely present my candidacy for the succession to "Poor Antoine," poor Antoine! Poor me! I should have said! I fled, I ran, I barely escaped being thrown from her door; and all night long I closed not an eye; the situation seemed to me to be growing too desperate.
I was no further advanced when the month of September arrived, the last month of my lease. True, I was no longer chased like a thief from her house when I presented my candidacy, but Sabine appeared bored, stiffed a yawn, or turned the subject to indifferent matters. I much preferred the threatened door, for then I divined that she was afraid of me.
Early in September, the 10th to be exact, Mine de Montclair applied me when I arrived as usual at her gate in the morning, that she was going to Paris, and going that night, merely to crush her sorrow over some repairs done recently at her apartment.
They had already closed the doors of the express that evening, which scarcely more than stews at full Chantilly; and still Sabine had not come. She only reached the platform in truth as the bell rang to start.
"Quick! Quick! Hurry up, Madame!" the employes cried, wildly beckoning.

"Quick! Quick! Hurry up, Madame!" the employes cried, wildly beckoning.
Instead of mounting, however, she felt back in my arms, half swooning. Behold what she had seen and I had seen with her! All the seals of the carriage were unoccupied, but leaped with a litter of bags and bundles, tumbled pell-mell together like the wreckage left from a giant struggle while above the seats juddled like monkeys in the nets of the wagon, three wild-eyed men clung, disordered also, and holding in their hands over three guns at full cock, the lamp light shining broad and free into the gaping muzzles!
"Do not enter! Do not enter!" yelled in chorus the men as they gathered about the door and leaped, Sabine and I, to the van adjoining, scarce conscious of what we were doing in our haste and bewilderment.
"Did you see them? Did you see those men?" she gasped, her breath coming sobbingly. "It is a duel, a duel, I tell you, an American duel! I've heard of them often. But hark! hark! Listen to that!"
A fusillade of guns, a regular volley—two—three—five—then—God knows how many times the shots resounded, dominated always by a pro-
