What he said constantly to young story writers was that while they were searching in the imaginations for the material for the stories, the material in reality was lying all around them.

Great battles are really won before they are actually fought. To control our passions, we must govern our habits and keep watch over ourselves in the small details of every-day life.

Every man really consists of three individuals—himself as he sees himself, himself as others see him and himself as he really is.

Some men see all things as individuals, other see things only in groups, while he with the really great mind separates each individual as he relates to study and makes all else but one.

Old-Time Kitchens. With the best will in the world, writes Elizabeth Robins Pennell, in Harper's Bazar, I have discovered little about the classical kitchen, except that it existed, that it probably stood apart from the house, and that sometimes it was provided with a chimney.
