

Milk Powders.
For a generation or more inventors have been trying to find some way to reduce milk to a powder like flour, in which state it could be kept, like flour, or an indefinite period, and changed at will to milk by the addition of water. Now and then we hear of some main expect the early advent of the drying state of the country of the process on the market. But always the inventor has falled to realize his expectations. The invention of a perfect process would revolutionize the milk trade, as it would make it possible to produce milk thousands of miles believed to be a produce milk thousands of miles port it at a its consumed and time we charged. Such a powder, transmutable to milk would become second only to wheat flour as an article of diet. Some day, doubtless, the errert of
