

LORD SALISBURY, DISTINGUISHED BRITISH STATESMAN, IS DEAD

One Man Has Finished Up His Gib Talkers.

It is a common and commercial trick to place a visitor in your office in a chair facing a window, while you sit in a chair with its back to the window. Your eyes are in the cracks; he is in the glare. You can read him through and through, while he cannot even catch the color of your capot.

This is especially true when the visitor is supposed to be a customer. The stranger must not be allowed to take any undue advantage. There is one wily old gentleman, the very salt of the earth, who has been known to play this game many times as smart promoters. At last he is grown suspicious. He not only throws the limelight into the visitor's face, but he sits in a high-backed chair with an unsteady foundation. This is a dream of a nerve upsetter. When the visitor gets overheated in argument the doctor cracks; he is distracted. As he collects himself and proceeds forth the chair cracks again and he is rattled. There is a clock in the room, and the visitor, from the hour of 2:10 in seven years, and when the poor fellow glues his eyes to its face he is completely done up, or, worse, he is simply, as the clock says, flitting the deed with discreet eyes.

LORD SALISBURY

Marquis of Salisbury, distinguished statesman and former premier of the British Empire, who has just passed away.

FORMER BRITISH PREMIER DEAD

Lord Salisbury passes away at his home, Hatfield, England.

Lord Salisbury, former British premier, died Aug. 22 at his home in Hatfield.

When news came of his fatal illness, the once all-powerful statesman had disappeared as completely from public life as if he were already a tenant of the grave. A few short months out of office suffered for the sake of the most illustrious houses of the nation, the immense influence of official notoriety upon the popular imagination. The indispensable statesman was reduced to a cipher, as most retired politicians are when they retire voluntarily or involuntarily to make room for their indispensable successors.

HEART DROPS FOUR INCHES.

Peculiar Case of a New Jersey Boy.

With his heart out of place and appearing at times to be twice its normal size, nine-year-old James B. Groat is furnishing a case that is baffling half a dozen leading surgeons in New-Haven, N. J. He is the son of George B. Groat, an inventor.

Value of "Alpine Air."

The London Oxygen hospital, which held its annual general meeting recently, shortly after its officials had been notified that he had great difficulty in breathing. When the first physician was called the apex of the boy's heart was found to be about an inch and a half lower than it should be. It continued to sink until it was four inches out of place. Then he was taken to the hospital. It was only by constant administration of stimulants that he was kept alive. The pulse was intermittent, the coats sometimes registering only fifty to the minute.

Venerable Hermit Dead.

Water for Fowls.

The methods of supplying water to fowls are usually crude. On the farm especially, where the fowls are reduced to a minimum, we find the least attention paid to working-arrangements. The large poultry-keepers go about the matter in a more like way and make arrangements for the automatic watering of the fowls and thus save many steps and annoyances.

WANTED AN EYE FOR EACH.

Young Clerk's Close Watch Without Its Proper Reward.

"It is my duty to watch you," said one of the boys in the class who had just stilled up to the counter, "that my sister is a confirmed kleptomaniac. You must watch her most carefully."
