

Mozart's Great Gifts

(Special Correspondence)

The composer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, was born in Salzburg, Jan. 27, 1756. His father, Leopold Mozart, was captainmaster in the service of the archbishop. Leopold Mozart and his wife were spoken of as the handsomest couple in Salzburg. And we know from the portraits the strange and fascinating beauty of the face of Wolfgang Mozart. Therefore his memory revered to-day for his sweetness and love of humanity, his testimony of vast genius.

From his earliest childhood Mozart fulfilled the year for the year, fame and glory, as Milan he received an order for an opera, and accomplished his work very successfully at 13 years of age.

In Rome the Pope, Clement XIV., conferred upon him the order of the Golden Spur, a very high compliment, and thus the boy of 14 wore the title of Chevalier of the Holy Roman Empire. From one of his father's letters we learn that while in Rome Mozart heard the famous "Miserere" by Allegri sung in the Sistine Chapel. The rendering made so deep an impression upon the lad that on reaching home he wrote down from memory every bar of the music. The cause and result musicians were forbidden to copy any part of it.

At 16 the city of Munich gave the young composer an order to write an opera, and the work was a great success. The archbishop of Salzburg employed him now as concert master. His salary was small and the archbishop not only exacting but jealous of the young man's success. So those years under Jerome, the archbishop, were hard ones.

When Mozart was 20 he and his mother went to Paris (he having left the service of the archbishop), where his fame so widespread that he died and died. Paris now seemed so horrible to the young man that he left the city and returned to Munich, where he wrote his opera "Idomeneo," which met with great success.

At 26 Mozart married Constance Weber, and like the people of the time they lived happily together until the too soon ending of the life of this wonderful man.

The writing of the "Marriage of Figaro" and "Don Giovanni" followed his marriage, and in these operas we find the strongest music Mozart had written up to this time. The operas at once made him famous, and he gained at a jump a place in the world that they have always kept. The Emperor at this time appointed Mozart court composer. Then came the "Magic Flute," wherein Mozart is at his best.

His wife, joining him in Vienna, was much shocked at Mozart's weakness. He was working even harder than "Idomeneo"; he had withdrawn from pleasures and wrote, wrote unceasingly. It seemed his young life was being worn into the music. He grew steadily weaker, and on the 6th of December, 1791, the young man of but 35 laid down his pen, giving careful directions for the finishing of his masterly work, the "Requiem."

Mozart left over 600 compositions, including operas, 15 masses, 49 symphonies. His symphony in G minor is one of which Schubert said: "You can hear the angels singing in it." He wrote many quartets, and they are among his greatest works, songs, sonatas and chamber music; and finally the "Requiem," the greatest in the world's history of music.
