The street repairs came last week... Indian, roared, broke and said...

Affairs in the Indian country were at peace when the post commander at Fort Brown...

It was a frontier post with a small garrison of old veterans, and there was no call for red tape or rigid discipline...

Such a man was private Tom Gorman at Fort Brown. Two bullets had been fired into him as he rode with dispatch across the plains...

At all military posts there are a few favored men—men who suffer now and then from old wounds or have performed their brave deeds...

The odding ceased soon after the major's arrival. He was on the look-out for such men...

This is a military post, not a hospital, and no man, unless excused by the doctor at sick call, will be exempt from duty...

Private Gorman returned to duty with a complaint, and subsequent events proved that the marlinet had a special eye on him...

It was an inside post, and of no consequence. The wounded man took the chance of getting under shelter for a short time...

The major came riding back, his eyes on the ground as if looking for some lost object. At the rock he halted...

And then, thrusting the photograph into his breast pocket, he strode off. The major gave himself up and headed for the land of the outlaw and the deserter...

Private Gorman did not serve out his sentence of thirty days in the guard house. When he had served ten days he was assigned to the kitchen...

At about every morning the major rode down to the spring, three miles from the fort...
