QUICK RESULTS.

W. J. Hill, of Concord, N. C., Justice of the Peace, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills proved a very efficient remedy in my case. I used them for disordered kidneys and backache, from which I had experienced a great deal of trouble and pain. The kidney secretions were very irregular, dark colored and full of sediment. The pills cleared it all up and I have not had an ache in my back since taking the last dose. My health generally is improved a great deal."

In the early railroad days, and that era may be brought down to a comparatively recent date, roadbeds were constructed largely along the lines of least resistance. The economy of time was not considered as carefully as the economy of construction. Then came the era of speed, when the saving of the hours became all important. Now, high-speed locomotives were invented and fast express schedules were arranged with few stops, but there was still another great factor in bringing about the present fast train service, that the average person fails to take into account. A great deal of speed can be put into the track itself. And so came an era of improvement in the roadbed, and grades were cut down and filled up to as near a dead level as possible, and cut-offs were built, to eliminate bends and curves. So with "a fast track" and high-speed locomotives the modern express trains and "specials" have reduced the distance between points and added to the fast train service without sacrificing either comfort or safety.—From "The World's Progress," in Four-Track News for November.

California, the Land of Resorts.

California is essentially a country with an all-the-year-round outing season. Its summer and winter resorts are limited only by its boundaries. Many of these are widely known and advertised, while others—and these not the least among the attractive—are known and loved only by a favored few.—Carrie Stevens Walter in Sunset Magazine for November.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Mrs. Fairbanks tells how neglect of warning symptoms will soon prostrate a woman. She thinks woman's safeguard is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Ignorance and neglect are the cause of untold female suffering, not only with the laws of health but with the chance of a cure. I did not heed the warnings of headaches, organic pains, and general weakness, until I was well high prostrated. I knew I had to do something. Happily I did the right thing. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound faithfully, according to directions, and was rewarded in a few weeks to find that my aches and pains disappeared, and I again felt the glow of health through my body. Since I have been well I have been more careful, I have also advised a number of my sick friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and they have never had reason to be sorry. Yours very truly, Mrs. MAY FAIRBANKS, 216 South 7th St., Minneapolis, Minn." On the Surface

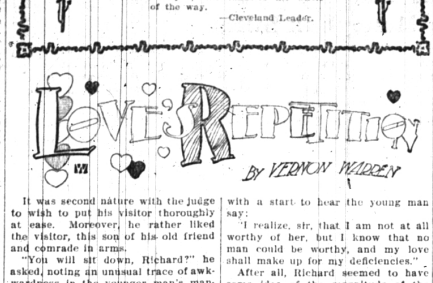
It's a pretty good world if you skim along
In the safe, shallow places close in to shore;
It's a pretty good world if you sail your craft
Away from the depths and the rapids' roar.

There are things in the depths far beyond your ken;
In strenuous rapids you'll find dismay;
It's a pretty good world if you skim along,
And keep to the shallows the whole of the way.

—Cleveland Leader.



It was second nature with the judge to wish to put his visitor thoroughly at ease. Moreover, he rather liked the visitor, this son of his old friend and comrade in arms.

"You will sit down, Richard?" he asked, noting an unusual trace of awkwardness in the younger man's manner.

From an open window on the other side of the house floated the sound of a girl's voice, a full, rich contralto, singing a little love song, old-fashioned and quaintly beautiful.

It brought up memories to the older man, and in their strain he seemed half to forget the presence of the other.

It cost him an effort to bring himself back into the present and to make some conventional remark about the beauty of the evening; a remark to which the younger man replied in a strain of equal conventionality.

"Margaret is in the drawing room, Richard, and is expecting you, I believe. At last I seem to remember that she said you were going to call this evening."

"I will join her presently, sir. But I wished to see you first."

At this remark the old man looked quickly and sharply at the guest.

Could it be possible this young jackanapes was coming to ask for Margaret's hand? The idea was too ridiculous to be entertained for a moment.

Margaret was a mere child of 20 or 21 at most, and this youngster could be but little older. He was only the other day that Margaret and Richard had been making mud pies together.

There was a disquieting air of grave solemnity in Richard's voice, which disturbed his host, and the words which followed completed the shock.

"I want to ask your consent to your daughter's marriage with me, sir," went on the younger man, somewhat hastily, but with a fine air of pride in his manner.

After all, reflected the judge, something like this was bound to come sooner or later. But there was no earthly reason why the young man should be in such a hurry to carry off Margaret. They were both mere children, and neither could be certain of their mind at so tender an age.

Yet Richard, he was bound to admit, filled most of the requisites of the man who should marry his daughter.

Determined not to offend the young man nor hurt his feelings unnecessarily, he began to point out these reasons why the desired consent should be withheld.

The exposition was beautifully logical, the judge felt with warm pride, and must certainly appeal to any reasoning human being. And he had always felt that Richard was a young man of exceptional intelligence.

But, strange to say, the reasons did not seem to impress the young man as seriously as he could have wished. Indeed, Richard showed an obstinate tendency to combat them.

The judge scarcely heard all of the young man's eager arguments. The voice from within the drawing room had taken up the burden of another old-fashioned love song that the judge remembered well from the days of his youth.

And this stirred memories of one who sang the song in those days—the mother of the girl who was singing now.

But this thing must not be. What was to remain to cheer his own life if this young man was taking away his only daughter, the daughter whom he had so loved and watched over, the daughter who was the image of her dearly loved mother?

"I want to ask your consent."

As he listened unheedingly to the arguments of the young man and dreamily to the music from the open window, another dream of the long ago came to him:

He, a young man once more, was standing before an old man and asking for his daughter, answering argument with argument, and wrath with proud humility and dogged tenacity of purpose. After all, he reflected, each of us is an individual and life must be lived.

He had half forgotten that Richard was waiting, and he recalled himself with a start to hear the young man say:

"I realize, sir, that I am not at all worthy of her, but I know that no man could be worthy, and my love shall make up for my deficiencies."

After all, Richard seemed to have some idea of the magnitude of the boon which he was seeking. He would bid them wait awhile; they would know their own minds better in a few years and would be able to learn if what they felt was really love or only its counterfeit. Something of this he put into words for his answer.

Much to his surprise his great concession seemed to meet with a cool reception. With a singular tenacity of purpose and stupefying audacity the young man seemed about to argue with him.

"Margaret is 21, sir, and I am 26. I think we may each of us claim to be old enough to know our own minds. You, yourself, as you told me, were married when you were 21 and your wife 18."

The image of her dearly loved mother.

"But that was a different case, Richard."

"How different, sir?"

"Why——" For the life of him the judge could not have told what the difference was.

"You mean that you loved the girl who was to become your wife very dearly, and that you felt you could not wait for her. Is not that the case, sir?"

The judge thought the young man was treading very close to the borderland which lies between earnestness and impudence. But he had stated the true condition of affairs.

The song inside the house had ceased, and Margaret came toward them along the piazza. In the moonlight the resemblance to her mother seemed even stronger than in the daylight.

When she reached the two she stood and looked at her father. There was a question in her eyes, a question that was unsaid.

And when the judge had nodded his consent the young man and the young woman looked at each other as only——

* * * * *

As he sat alone in the moonlight and smoked dreamily the judge recalled with a deep sigh that the love-light which he saw in his daughter's eyes had completed the resemblance to her mother.—Vernon Warren in Boston Globe.

The Censor in Italy.

A most amusing incident took place last week, which shows the absolute absurdity of the censorship in Italy.

The great actor, Ermete Novelli, now in South America, has a son who lives in Florence, to whom was born a bouncing boy. The young Novelli, in haste to let his father know that he had made him a grandfather, telegraphed: "Ermete Novelli, Buenos Ayres: Boy. Enrico." Several hours later he was called to the telegraph office, where the following conversation took place:

"You know we could not let your dispatch pass."

"Not let it pass! But why, if you please?"

"You know you said it was a boy—and if I did, what then? Is it not true?".

"Well, that is what we do not know yet."

"What! Are you crazy? I know it!"

"Well, anyway, public order demands that it should not be made public."

"Made public! Am I making it public by telegraphing to my father? And, in any case, what has the birth of my son got to do with public order? Excuse me, have you all taken leave of your senses?"

"Your son?" gasped the other. "We thought you were telegraphing about the queen!".

Seventy-Six Years in One House.

QUEER FISH OF THE NORTH.

Narwhal One of the Strangest of Sea Animals.

One of the strangest of sea animals is the narwhal, conjectured by some to be the original of the fabled unicorn. The great peculiarity of this graceful cetacean lies in its long tusk, a polished ivory shaft, straight as an arrow and sharp as a lance, which protrudes from its head to a great distance. This formidable and glittering appendage gives to the animal a striking and spectacular appearance. The narwhals appear off the coast of Greenland in schools, making excursions into the various bays and fiords in search of food. A band of a hundred or more form a picturesque sight when plowing through the water in military-like procession, the long, glittering horns all rising in unison as they come up to the surface to blow. Their advent is hailed with delight by the Eskimos, as they are said to be the forerunners of the early approach of the right whale, which uses the same kind of food as the narwhal.

Greenlanders hunt the narwhal actively, as they are very fond of its flesh, and the ivory of its horn is useful for many purposes. The nutritious skin forms the most delicious sort of chewing gum for both men and women and is regarded as a choice luxury. The body is covered to a depth of three or four inches with a layer of fine blubber, weighing half a ton and yielding a large amount of the best grade of oil.

One of the most highly prized trophies which Lieut. Peary brought back from his last journey to Greenland was the ivory tusk of a narwhal. This is the record-breaking specimen of the world, measuring eight feet in length and eight inches in circumference at its thickest part. A realization of its height is gained when it is placed alongside a man, the extreme point of the tusk overtopping his head two feet.

MODERN WAYS IN JAPAN.

Western Customs Being Introduced and Assimilated.

If you but try to look at a tiny hand of any girl in a well-to-do family of present day Japan—a hand coming out of a scarlet lined sleeve—you will easily find a jeweled ring or rings on her fingers. Jewels we had none before, but we prize them just the same. As to the wearing of rings, even gentlemen are often seen with a thick gold ring made out of an old Japanese coin called "Tempo." The study of the introduction of a new custom is interesting.

In the case of "snow white pillows," they were first used in hospitals, where we adopted everything from the west as a matter of course. We had not have sheets for our beds along with that, but cleanness recommended itself to the Japanese, and the custom was readily followed by those who took a fancy to it.

As to kissing, it is rather delicate to touch on, but it cannot be dismissed with a general statement that "in affection and love the Japanese are outwardly undemonstrative." All depends upon circumstances. Generally speaking, we shun the eyes of the public to be demonstrative, or to seek the occasion when all can join with us. Kissing as practiced in the west is still strange to us, but no one who knows about it would wonder if a young couple of modern Japan should take to it to express their love.

Thought Him Another Man.

"You've no idea how a little neglect will change a man's personal appearance till you've tried it in a mining camp for a time," remarked a returned Klondiker the other day.

"I went to the Klondike when the fever first struck the country and stayed there for two years. In that time I had paid no attention to dress beyond having enough on to keep warm. My hair and beard were innocent of a trimming in all that time. When I reached Skagway on my way home I didn't look human.

"I registered at the principal hotel, a little place in 'Fifth avenue,' and then went out to see if I could improve my personal appearance before dinner time. I got a shave, haircut and a bath to begin with. Then I bought a suit of clothes and complete civilized outfit.

"When I went in to dinner the landlady, Mrs. Burke, looked at me with suspicion and asked me if I had registered. I was surprised.

"'Certainly,' I said. 'We were talking together about the Klondike for some time. You haven't forgotten that, have you?'

"It was not till I had reproduced our conversation, shown the key to my room and identified my baggage that she was satisfied.

"'Well! Are you that old Santa Claus that came here this afternoon?' she said. 'You'd better register over again.'"

Lift of the Heart.

When we stand with the woods around us
And the great boughs overhead;
When the wind blows cool on our foreheads,
And the breath of the pines is shed;
When the song of the thrush is ringing
Wonderful, rich apart—
Then the sound—then the silence
Comes a sudden lift of the heart.

When we seek with the clearer vision
That grief the traveler brings
From the strife and the shot together
In the closer-wrought web of things,
And find that pain is woven
Into love and joy and art—
Between the sense and the solace
Comes a sudden lift of the heart.

And when life's farthing candle
Gutters and flares and sinks,
When the eye-anger wanders
And the brain no longer thinks;
When only the hand plucks idly
At the sheet till the spirit part—
Does there come between living and dying
A sudden lift of the heart?

CAUGHT IN WRONG BLUFF.

Good Idea, but Unfortunately the Cradle Was Empty.

A clock in a nearby tower had just tolled off the hour of 4 as he arose unsteadily from the card table, where he had sat for three hours, stretched his weary limbs, bade his comrades good night and started in the direction of his home.

After a half-hour's walk in which all the lamp posts and telegraph poles insisted on getting in his way, he arrived at his home, took out his bunch of keys, at last found the elusive keyhole and softly opening the door and discarding his shoes at the foot of the stairs, climbed heavenward on all fours. With catlike footsteps he crept across the threshold of his bedroom and proceeded to undress. He heard his wife move restlessly, which made him hurry, and in doing so he up set a chair. Stepping quickly over to the cradle in the corner, he commenced to rock it violently.

"Is that you, John?" came his wife's voice from the bed.

"Yes, dear," he replied.

"Well, what in the world are you doing?" she asked.

"Why, I'm rocking this blamed kid to sleep."

"How long have you been there?"

"Since 11:30."

"Well, John, I think you had better get right into bed, as I have the child in here beside me; and, moreover, I've had him here ever since 11 o'clock last night."—Philadelphia Press.

Tennyson in Bitter Mood.

Aubrey de Vere has written some interesting lines concerning a period in Tennyson's life of which the public knows but little. He says concerning an unexpected morning call: "On my way in paid a visit to Tennyson, who seemed much out of spirits and said he could no longer bear to be knocked about the world and that he must marry and find love and peace or die. He was very angry about a very favorable review of him. Said that he could not stand the chattering and conceit of clever men or the worry of society or the meanness of tuft-hunters or the trouble of poverty or the labor of a place or the preying of the heart on itself. Said that no one had been so much harassed by anxiety and trouble as himself. I told him he wanted occupation, a wife and orthodox principles, which he took well."

Red Gum Wood Much Used.

Because it warps and stains in seasoning red gum was long neglected, but now 60 per cent of the barrels and boxes made in the south are made of red gum. The wood is also shipped to Europe, where it is made into furniture, and it is also used there in paving blocks. When steamed it is easily bent, and it thus becomes available for carriage rims and carriage wood stock.

OKLAHOMA OPPORTUNITIES

The completion by the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, of over 300 miles of railroad in Oklahoma opened a rich agricultural country of exceptional possibilities, besides giving direct connections between St. Louis, Hannibal and Kansas City, and Oklahoma City, Shawnee, Guthrie, El Reno, Enid and other Oklahoma points. Along the route are located new and growing towns—Cleveland, Jennings, Cushing, Agra, Fallis, Luther and Maud, situated right in the heart of a rich farming section, offering the best of opportunities for safe and profitable investments. The field is new and the prices of farm land are low.

The opportunity is "NOW."

In fourteen years the wealth of Oklahoma has steadily increased until at present it is approximately four hundred million dollars. Oklahoma has a population of a half million and fifty thousand; some three hundred banks with twenty-five million dollars on deposit.

The new fields in eastern Oklahoma are in the best fruit section of the country and produce the very best of fruit in abundance. At the World's Fair, the Wineaps and Jonathans from Eastern Oklahoma received awards in competition with the best fruit sections of the world. The rainfall in this field is about forty inches and well distributed. The weather and crop reports can be carried on the year round.
