Two severe cases of Ovarian Trouble and two terrible operations avoided. Mrs. Emmons and Mrs. Coleman each tell how they were saved by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am so pleased with the results obtained from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I feel it a duty and a privilege to write you about it.

"I suffered for more than five years with ovarian troubles, causing an unpleasant discharge, a great weakness, and at times a faintness would come over me which no amount of medicine, diet, or exercise seemed to correct. Your Vegetable Compound found the weak spot, however, within a few weeks—and saved me from an operation—all my troubles had disappeared, and I found myself once more healthy and well. Words fail to describe the real, true, grateful feeling that is in my heart, and I want to tell every sick and suffering sister. Don't dally with medicines you know nothing about, but take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and take my word for it, you will be a different woman in a short time."—MRS. LAURA EMMONS, Walkerville, Ont.

Another Case of Ovarian Trouble Cured Without an Operation.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For several years I was troubled with ovarian trouble and a painful and inflamed condition, which kept me in bed part of the time. I did so dread a surgical operation.

"I tried different remedies hoping to get better, but nothing seemed to bring relief until a friend who had been cured of ovarian trouble, through the use of your compound, induced me to try it. I took it faithfully for three months, and at the end of that time was glad to find that I was a well woman. Health is nature's best gift to woman, and if you lose it and can have it restored through Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel that all suffering women should know of this."—MRS. LAURA BELLE COLEMAN, Commercial Hotel, Nashville, Tenn.

It is well to remember such letters as above when some druggist tries to get you to buy something which he says is "just as good." That is impossible, as no other medicine has such a record of cures as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; accept no other and you will be glad.

Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about your sickness you do not understand. She will treat you with kindness and her advice is free. No woman ever regretted writing her and she has helped thousands. Address Lynn, Mass.

$5000 FORFEIT if we cannot forthwith produce the original letters and signatures of above testimonials, which will prove their absolute genuineness. Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co., Lynn, Mass.

HUMOR OF A BIG FIRE

On Sunday night a kind gentleman rang a doorbell uptown and informed the anxious mother within that her son would not be home that night, as he was helping his employers to keep off the fire. The mother got very excited.

"But he must come home," she cried; "tell him I say he must, understand me, he must come home."

"But, my dear lady," said the man soothingly, "he can't come home; every one of the employes are in exactly the same fix."

"Well, I don't care about anybody else; he must come home. Where is he now?"

"He's on the roof."

"On the roof," she screamed, "and he's got on the best clothes he owns."

"No, my dear madam, he hasn't on his best clothes," the man managed to edge in.

"What's he got on, then; hasn't he anything on?"

The man blushed.

"He has on a pair of overalls, a pair of rubber boots, and he is handling a hose like a fireman."

Then the man fled and the mother fell a-weeping.

A little girl heard the rumor that the whole city would burn up, so she determined to prepare. She got down an old satchel and in it she carefully packed away a few cents that she had saved, small pieces of bric-a-brac that she prized, her limited amount of jewelry, and her ticket for the Boston Symphony concert. With the satchel clasped in her arms she determined to stay up all night and await the worst. But the sand man was too much for her. Gradually her head sank forward. She was fast asleep, but close to her breast she still clutched the precious satchel.

A large family living out near Druid Hill park was suddenly awakened about 2 o'clock on Monday morning by some kind relative at the telephone.

The good, anxious soul meant to warn them. She had received official notice that the city was all going to be blown up by a gas explosion. Let them all get up. Let them dress themselves, and binding on their jewels be prepared to fly. The family believed. It got up and hurriedly dressed, hat, coat, gloves, and all, clothed in their Sunday raiment. Five minutes passed, ten minutes, fifteen. At last the paterfamilias could stand it no longer. He rushed up to the telephone and called up police headquarters. The rumor was false. "It ain't so," he yelled down the steps, and stamped into his room slamming the door after, and the family with averted faces went slowly upstairs, undressed again, and went to bed.

When told by her mother that the fire had destroyed her father's business a little girl was heard to say: "Oh, mamma, will we be very poor, then, and must I come in through the back gate so the other girls won't see my ragged dresses?"

How Wild Beasts Attack

Those who obtain their knowledge of how wild animals pounce upon their prey, be it a human being or a fellow brute, from the picture books will have to revise their ideas if they are made true to life. Most of the conceptions are entirely wrong, according to the statement of a close student of such things.

"In seizing their prey tigers and lions almost invariably go for the throat," he says, "though in one or two instances that have come under my notice of animals killed by tigers they have evidently first been hamstrung. These, probably, were the victims of young and inexperienced tigers. I once saw a man charged and knocked over by a panther, and he only saved his throat by putting up his arm, which, as well as his shoulder, the animal grasped with teeth and claws.

"Anyone who knows anything about elephants must be aware that the trunk, and particularly the tip of the trunk, is the most delicate and sensitive part of the animal and that he shields it from injury by every possible means in his power. It is, therefore, very unlikely that he would expose it in the act of charging. My experience, limited though it be, points to the fact that an elephant, once he has made up his mind to charge, curls up his trunk tight.

"Bisons and buffalos when they charge invariably poke their noses in the air and commence running at you with their head well up, much in the manner of domestic cattle, and only lower their horns when within a few yards of the object of their attentions. This I take to be a mere matter of common sense on the part of the animal, for if he puts his head down, say even forty yards away, he could not possible see where he was going.

"Bears when wounded will often get on their hind legs and dance about from sheer rage and will also at times do so in order to get a better view of the whereabouts of their enemy, but when they charge, whether it be at a man mounted or on foot, they invariably charge on all fours.

"In charging most animals give vent to certain vocal sounds—grunts or roars—and this, it is natural to suppose, is done with a view to terrifying and demoralizing the object they are attacking—in fact, more often than not it is a mere bluff on the animals' part. I have often seen tigers rear when charging who never really mean mischief and who when met by a bold front turned off."

A Heroine of Lucknow

An interesting figure in English history has passed away in the person of Lady Inglis, who died recently at London after a short illness.

Lady Julia Salina Inglis was the second daughter of the first Lord Chelmsford and was born in 1833.

She was the widow of the famous defender of the British residency at Lucknow, Sir John Eardley Wilmot Inglis, K.C.B., who died in 1882, and in memory of whose services in the Indian Mutiny she had been in receipt of a pension.

Lady Inglis herself went through the siege of Lucknow, and in addition to the terrors of the siege and the subsequent journey to the coast she was shipwrecked on the voyage home to England.

She afterward published the diary she kept during her eventful life in the besieged city, where her husband, then Brigadier Inglis, commanded the garrison throughout the eighty-seven days the place was invested.

She describes the entrance into the residency, on a day when glad shouts rang through the tortured city, of "a short, quiet looking, gray haired man, whom I knew at once was Gen. Havelock. He shook hands with me and said he feared that we had suffered a great deal.

"I could hardly answer him. . . . It was a moment of unmixed happiness, but not lasting. I felt how different my lot was to others. . . . I tried to write home, but could not.

"The relieving force had suffered most severely. . . . The wounded had been abandoned. . . . The enemy had loopholed the houses and shot the poor fellows down by scores as they passed through the narrow streets."

Once while on the dangerous march from Lucknow to the coast the sudden command "Halt!" rang out in the night.

Lady Inglis had a baby with her at this time, and thus she writes: "Silence was ordered and all lights to be put out. . . . I shall never forget my anxiety lest baby should commence crying again and perhaps betray our whereabouts." Fortunately baby did not cry.

On the way to England her ship was wrecked near the coast of Ceylon, and hope had been almost abandoned when the passengers, who had been drifting about in small boats, were picked up by a native vessel and taken into Trincomalee.

The Little One's Request

The dinner done, the lamp is lit,
And in its mellow glow we sit
And talk of matters, grave and gay,
That went to make another day.
Comes Little One, a book in hand,
With this request—nay, this command.
For who'd gainsay the little sprite?
"Please—will you read to me to-night?"

Read to you, Little One? Why, yes.
What shall it be to-night? Your guess
You're like to hear about the bears—
Their porridge, beds and chairs?
Well, that you shall. There, that tale's final
And now—"You'd like another one?"
To-morrow evening, Curly Head;
It's "Hans-pass seven!" Off to bed!

So each night another story—
Wicked elves and giants gory,
Dragons fierce and princes daring,
Forth to fame and fortune faring.

Wandering folk, with leaves for bed,
Houses made of gingerbread,
Witches bad and fairies good,
And all the wonders of the wood.

"I like the witches best," says she,
Who nightly nestles on my knee.
But why by them she sets such store
Psychologists must puzzle o'er.
Her likes are mine, and I agree
With all that she confides in me,
And thus we travel hand in hand,
The storied roads of fairyland.

Ah, little one, when years have fled,
And left their silver on my head,
And when the dimming eyes of age
With difficulty scan the page,
On you I'll turn the tables then,
For I shall put the question, when
I borrow of your better sight;
"Please—will you read to me to-night?"
—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Errors by the Earnest

Indifference causes humanity a tremendous expense daily but the errors of the earnest are more than any common observer would believe.

Sincere people are making mistakes which they regret but which they do not know how to guard against.

To prevent errors requires two kinds of information—one to encourage a greater individual earnestness and another for the earnest who are in the dark on the daily sources of greater individual accuracy.

All of us are more or less in the dark on these subjects but some of us know one useful idea or some others know another and by uniting our wisdom or bunching our brains we are able to conquer inanimate and mutual enemies.

There is coming a time when we will join in fighting fire and faithlessness in place of fighting each other. Humanity has been fighting itself for centuries and there must be some useful result for posterity to profit by. Knowledge and skill with which to fight inanimate enemies may be the harvest.

28 Army Generals Send Letters of Endorsement To The Inventor of the Great Catarrh Remedy, Pe-ru-na.
