

THE OLD REGIMENT.

Long ago, on a summer's day, Over the hills, they marched away...

Then in the furrow the plowshare slept, O'er wheel and anvil a silence crept...

We watched them go with their guns gleam, Down past the mill and the winding stream...

Forth they leaped to the surging fray, Shoulder to shoulder in brave array...

Forward still through the seething hell, Of war's dread slaughter they fought and fell...

Save for the daimed and the shattered few, They come no more to the old battle ground...

They wake no more to the battle's noise, Kinfolk, friends and the neighbors' boys...
