Emma Coffey, wife of Selby Coffey, was drowned near Altonville, near Gall, Mass., Saturday. Her 11-year-old son, Winnie, was bathing and got into deep water, where he struggled. The mother rushed into the water to save him and succeeded for a time, then went away for help. A man, who was with her, jumped in and both ends of the building were blown out and the entire neighborhood was in flames. The explosion followed by a fire which consumed the building before anything could be saved. The building was a coal shed and a barrel of lye used oil, but just how they figured in the explosion cannot be solved.
