CHAPTER XVII

The sun shined two hours high when Lattie awoke from slumber...

In view of Lattie's dying request, he had considered carefully the arrangements for Lattie's immediate future...

As to the slaves, of whom there were several hundred, it was not prudent to attempt taking them in a body to Louisiana...

A rustle of draperies, a stealing of perfume like that of Jessamine flowers, a pair of soft arms thrown about his neck...

"You have been so long, so long away, and I was so glad to see you come back to me, Ah, Jean, will you know how dearly I love you?"

Immediate future, after which his property was to be divided...

It was in his care that Lattie committed the error of his life...

GOT PURSE FOR THE BAR.

Winner of Race Had Close Call in Collecting Money.

Mrs. O. C. H. is fond of telling the story of an incident which occurred when he was racing a string of horses on the unincorporated track at the farm house in a town not far from Jersey City...

There had been some falls at the track, and the jockeys always came up to the stand to collect the purse.

"I'll have to send out for the money, said the secretary. 'I'll have paid out the money for the children employed for the bait.'"

"And, sure enough," says Cassidy in relating the story, "was from the fact that the dog dug up the money for the bait."

"The man that shuts his eyes and breeds his or mias with the hope of getting a good specimen of the gambler in breeding, some have tried to cross shorthorns with Jerseys, Geeseys, Holsteins and Ayrshires...

Working Good Mares.

Some of the leading horse breeders of the country never put their brood mares in harness. They provide exercise for their brood mares by keeping the stock in vigorous health...

Discipline Not His Forte.

That night when he got to the stable he found the children waiting for him. One little had clinched a penny and was out of the salary.

"Oh, I don't want my pay, and then we'll get out of the salary."
