

We cannot analyze in his way. There is no holding ground. You have to go with the way. Our blague is seaward bound. You must swim with the tide. We fall with the way. For we shall never see the shore. Sweet island of To-day.

We know not where we are bound. We will not know the way. We have formed the way we find. Our hearts desire, yet wild and true. Know not our course, with wind and tide. Yet would we find with the slide. Sweet island of To-day.

AT PINKNET

BY ADDING DOUCOLLE

For a long time I held my pink eye and my good resolution came to naught. I must have had the author of that letter. I bowed to my wife's passionate protestations of love, I scolded her half-hysterical emotion, then getting into my overcoat, I made my escape.

I turned the letter over three or four times, then tore it open and read the following words written in a cramped handwriting I had never seen before:

"Dear Mr. Tony—Though it may be folly to make such invitation to a married man, I risk it any way. I will be at the Bon Ton Cafe and wait for you. One who loves you."

I was astounded. What could this be? Who was this mysterious "Z" who could be so bold as to make such rendezvous at the Bon Ton, one of the gayest restaurants of the city?

By six o'clock I had changed my mind and had persuaded myself that my every life depended upon going to that rendezvous. For the first time since my marriage I was embarrassed before my wife during the dinner.

"Yes, sweetheart," I replied, thankful that her eyes were lower and she could not see my face. "I am more than devoted for I am deeply disappointed. I had planned to spend the evening with you, as usual, but a business appointment with a man from out of town will not let me be to the office this evening, and it may be midnight—maybe later—before I can get home."

"With her eyes still averted from mine, but with a little quiver of the body, like a child about to sob, she said in disappointed tones:

"You surely are not going out again to-night. Can't that horrid business wait until to-morrow. A married man should stay home with his wife."

"That last sentence sounded as a reproach to my already alarmed conscience, but I again forced it to silence by assuming myself that the dinner was going to be a protest, clinging girl from some brutal revelation of my past wayward life."

"Yes, yes, I know," I hurried to reply, "but it is for your sake, little one, that I must go."

"You are not going out again to-night. Can't that horrid business wait until to-morrow. A married man should stay home with his wife."

"Yes, for your sake, dearest. Is it not your work to do your best in these fine clothes in which your soul

"Why should I receive one?" delights, this home which is the envy of other women, this—"

"That old habit of a conscience man's reproaching voice and I was about to say that business could wait and that I would not return to the office, when a vision of the wretched note I had just Woman Had Multiplicity of Reasons for Insomnia.

The woman who complains that she never sleeps well has many reasons for her tongue's end, and nobody dares dispute them. There is one woman in particular who never sleeps, and she spends her life in traveling and visiting. She therefore has an opportunity to test all sorts of places.

"I can sleep in New York on account of the elevated trains that run within a block of Cousin James' house," she explains. "In Philadelphia there is an electric light that shines from the corner right on my bedroom wall, and I never sleep with him close to a street through which the milk carts come very early."

"In Buffalo at Henry's, there's a cuckoo clock that keeps waking me up. When I'm with the Salsburgs I just lie and listen to the sea booming and the wind howling, and I can't sleep. Anna's, of course, there are babies."

"I should think you'd love to go out to see a performance of an operatic friend. 'Right in the woods, and no farm animals, like hens, or anything to disturb you.'"

People of China a Homogeneous Race

Confucius defined the Chinese as a homogeneous race, as benevolence, upright, decorum, enlightenment, sincerity. The Japanese characteristically despise the Chinese, and are to be taught by purposely inflicted hardship.

Archibald Little in his book, "The Far East," says that in the province of Kweichow half the population consists of aboriginal tribes, called by the Chinese "Manchus." These tribes are people have succeeded in preserving a semi-independence better than elsewhere in China by confining themselves to the mountains.

Mr. Little believes that, taken generally, the inhabitants of the China today are a wonderful homogeneous race, quite as much so as are the inhabitants of modern Europe, their habits, customs, manners and deportment being absolutely identical throughout the 'eighteen provinces."
