

FRODO BAGGINS

Where nightingales sing at night long. Let me see and hear the soft call of the nightingale. I have seen her twice, and I have seen her many times. I have seen her in the garden, and I have seen her in the wood. I have seen her in the field, and I have seen her in the meadow. I have seen her in the park, and I have seen her in the wood. I have seen her in the field, and I have seen her in the meadow. I have seen her in the park, and I have seen her in the wood.

Phantom Doves. A man who had been at work in a shoe factory in Maine had a vision one day. He was told that he eggs were "bantams," and he always was fond of bantams. "It don't take scarcely nothing to breed bantams," said he, and he was much obliged to you. And the young fellows in the same room in the shoe factory, who gave him the eggs, smiled among themselves. The eggs hatched, and then the devoted bantam raiser hung over the "chicks" in rapture. They were the most beautiful specimens of bantams, though, that he ever saw. They were the laziest and most insignificant and nakedest and fuzziest birds he ever met in all his existence. "Seems to me," professed he, the next day, as he stood at his work, "that them's mighty queer bantams. I can't think they're some new breed—something sort of original, you know. Such things do happen." The boys in the shop agreed, without much arguing, to come up and see them. They came in ones and twos and threes and squads, and filled the room. Some looked at the bantams with interest, and some with contempt, and after they had all over there they gave the hen fender the bottom of the plot. They had given him a setting of dove's eggs.

A Barometric Stone. So far only one stone has been discovered in the world which actually forecasts changes in the weather, and it was found in Finland by a man known as an explorer. This stone, which is known as the semakur, is mottled with white spots, but just before an approaching rainstorm, the spots turn a dusky black. The semakur is composed of clay, rock salt and nitre. When the atmosphere is saturated with water vapor, the salt in the stone shows itself in spots white on the surface, but when rain is expected the salt, absorbing the moisture, turns black, and thus acts as a barometer.

BATTLE OF BATTLE

In Quito, Ecuador, it is usual to uncover one's head when there is a dash of lightning. This is probably a relic of fire-worshipping days.

An old man named Kuss was buried in Eger, Hungary, with his fortune of $17,000 in his coffin. His relatives heard of it and exhumed his body and buried it.

A Paris bicycle thief who had stolen a bicycle belonging to a Mr. Marcel Brunard, was impaled on a mechanical pointer which the owner had concealed in the saddle of the machine for such emergencies.

An egg with a perfect yolk and containing another egg about the size of a lima's egg, which also had a good shell and was perfect, has been laid by a hen belonging to a Swindon (England) tradesman.

Many curious instances of old laws may still be found in England. In Cheshire the man who falls on a hat when a funeral is passing becomes liable by an old law to be taken before a magistrate and imprisoned.

Organ grinders in Verrieres, Belgium, are by law compelled to appear every morning before the police superintendent and play their instruments. The organs which change to be out of tune must be set in order before a magistrate may on the streets will be granted.

DETROIT'S NORTHWEST NOW GROWING RAPIDLY

By JAMES R. BROOKS. The northwestern part of the city, especially the region intersected by Warren Avenue and Grand River Avenue, beyond the railroad, has been for several years neglected by real estate dealers. Before the public eye there was strong movement to boom it, but the panic resulted disastrously for several years.
