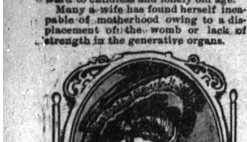
JOYS OF MATERNITY

A WOMAN'S BEST HOPES REALIZED

Mrs. Potts Tells How Women Should Prepare for Motherhood

The darkest days of husband and wife are when they come to look forward to childless and lonely old age.

Many a wife has found herself incapable of motherhood owing to a displacement of the womb or lack of strength in the generative organs.



Mrs. Anna Potts

Frequent backache and distressing pains, accompanied by offensive discharges and generally by irregular and scanty menstruation indicate a displacement or nervous degeneration of the womb and surrounding organs.

The question that troubles women is how can a woman who has some female trouble bear healthy children?

Mrs. Anna Potts, of 510 Park Avenue, Hot Springs, Ark., writes:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"During the early part of my married life I was delicate in health; both my husband and I were very anxious for a child to bless our home, but I had two miscarriages, and could not carry a child to maturity. A neighbor who had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advised me to try it. I did so and soon felt that I was growing stronger, my headaches and backaches left me, I had no more bearing-down pains, and felt like a new woman. Within a year I became the mother of a strong, healthy child, the joy of our home. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a splendid remedy, and I wish every woman who wants to become a mother would try it."

Actual sterility in woman is very rare. If any woman thinks she is sterile, let her try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free to expectant or would-be mothers.

The CONVICT COUNTRY or FIGHTING for a MILLION

BY CHARLES MORRIS BUTLER

Author of "The Revenge of Pierre," "A Tenement Tragedy," "Hell's Pit," etc.

Copyright, 1905, by Charles Morris Butler.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Lang's Last Desperate Scheme.

Jim Denver's body was left swaying at the end of a rope but for an instant. When the convicts drew away from the hanging in order to chase the treasure party, Louis Lang, mounted on a horse he had managed to capture from an overzealous spectator, ran under the limb of the tree supporting his friend and cut the body down before Denver reached him last. Phillip Farnham and Ben Bottom had raised the cry of "Gold!", and started the convicts off, and now complete darkness hid the retreat of these four last survivors of the coach party.

Knowing in advance the destination of the regulators, the four conspirators managed to catch up with the party, and eluding the convicts, before the first large town was reached the next morning. There was great rejoicing in the Hanchett party upon the arrival of Denver and Lang, because of the addition to the ranks of fighting men. This city was found to be almost an outlaw town. No bank there could be considered strong enough to hold the amount of treasure in the hands of Denver and Lang, and though they put up at the only hotel in the place, placing pickets around for safety, it soon became apparent that the pursuing convicts would get the best of the party unless aid could be in some way obtained, because neither food nor fresh stock could be furnished them. The millions in possession of Denver could not force the villagers to furnish anything whatever. Under the circumstances it was voted by the party to push on, and as the people would not sell stock or food, necessity knowing no law, the regulators boldly helped themselves to all the available fresh stock and edibles that they could lay hands on. To be sure, they left money and horses in their place, but the populace would not acknowledge that they were getting pay. Before the regulators got away there was a combined "bluff" made by the townspeople, helped out by the advance guard of Paradisans to restrain the party from leaving town, and a fight resulted in the regulators leaving two dead bodies behind them; but at last the city was left behind.

The regulators were but few now. Out of the ten ringleaders only five survived. Out of seventy-five men only forty had escaped alive. Though the fortune was a large one, there was not a man among the regulator crowd but what would have willingly given up his share to feel that his life would be safe. With Jim Denver it was something else. He had been saved from almost certain death at a very opportune time, and the real object of his journey—the destruction of the convict city and robbery of the vaults—had been accomplished. The treasure—his share and Lang's—would amount to a million at least, counting in the plate, jewels and the bonuses offered by the government for the killing of those persons who had "prices set upon their heads."

Lang's share would be greater than Denver's for, sharing alike in jewels and gold, he had now for his bride the Pearl of Paradise, and her father was heir to an English estate of great value.

But to resume the thread of description. The night wore away. When dawn broke the regulators had camped upon the banks of a river. During the night another brave man had fallen by the bullet of an unseen foe. Some of the men were discouraged, and others mutinous. At a convenient ford at that place a temporary bulwark of logs and earth were thrown up and preparations made for resistance here, while resting the tired horses and men.

A council of the ringleaders was called to devise some desperate means of saving the treasure and protecting the men. But no unanimous agreement could be reached. Several of the mutinous regulators made the demand that Lang and Hanchett divide up the spoils and let each man care for his own share. Lang explained that for the party to separate would only be to meet complete annihilation. But the men were determined not to tarry longer. The blinded fools imagined that four or five could better escape the convicts than the larger party. What each man hoped was that he at least would escape, little caring for the other fellow.

Lang himself saw a point to be gained in sending out three or four parties, provided a sufficient body of men would remain to protect the main treasure. No equal body of convicts would dare to tackle an equal number of regulators, hence the convicts won't also be divided up, so part of the treasure at least would be saved. And perhaps the convicts would be so cut up that a sally made by the regulators at a proper time might overpower the convicts themselves. Accordingly an agreement was made with the men, that at some convenient place those desiring to do so could take their share of the spoils and cut out for themselves.

According to agreement, the next morning, the regulators split up into five parties. A confab among the detectives present resulted in at least one capable, trustworthy man being placed in charge of each division, and unknown to the deserters, each of the leaders left his share (or a goodly share) of his spoils with Lang to guard, so that they would be free to fight without being compelled to risk the loss of treasure.

Black Jack Nesestoria took charge of one gang and made Stone City their destination, arriving there safely and banking their money. The four men had been followed by ten convicts; during the night following the regulators made a detour, and while the outlaws were quietly sleeping in camp managed to stampede their horses, and thus made it impossible for the convicts to follow them.

George Wilson commanded squad No. 2, and with three others made Amber City their destination. In the saddle and race following, two of the four regulators were killed and Wilson himself severely wounded; but he got to his destination all right and to Chicago in time.

Jim Denver started out at the head of a third squad, with the deliberate intention of calling attention to himself. Having no money of any great amount upon his person, and actuated by the desire to draw away from Lang as many fighting men as possible, he proceeded very slowly, drawing after him at least fifty men. He was fortunate enough to escape and reached the overland mail route unmolested, where he took passage going north. Having escaped a great danger he found his friends and fell, however, easy prey to a common "hold up," and while resisting was shot down and left for dead. When the stage resumed Denver was carried as far as Scroggin's Corners, and there left in the care of a physician, who in time cured the wound received. But the inaction of Denver, of course, made it hard for Lang, for it was the intention of Denver to hire a company of rangers to return and assist him.

Lang's party was the largest and best equipped. Hanchett and ten men managed to guard the ford for several hours, while Lang proceeded on his way in company with about ten more—and Mrs. Lang. The party reached the farmhouse before night and was enabled to buy a prairie schooner and an extra span of mules by paying almost a fabulous amount for them. He learned here the nearest town, and by good fortune got into the town before the convicts arrived. Here Lang's first real hard luck overtook him. He was abandoned by the whole company of regulators, who banked their money with the only bank in town and proceeded to make themselves free and easy. Rockford was sufficiently large, they thought, and civilized enough to afford them half protection, and they did not choose to continue with Lang when nothing was to be gained by it. They little thought that Lang had charge of the bulk of all of the money and that none but themselves had drawn out their shares. And of course, bad as he needed help, Lang did not dare to take even his own men into his confidence. He was left alone to fight his battle, to save his treasure and protect his wife.

Still Lang did not despair. He was coming now within the reach of civilization. He felt that one more day would place him where the convicts could at least be forced to move secretly—and when it came to strategy, Lang felt that he could outwit his foes. While Lang was meditating upon his hard luck and trying to figure out some way of escape, he saw before him in the town yard a gaudily painted wagon belonging to a showman and his wife, who were touring the territory with a Punch and Judy show. A brilliant idea entered Lang's head, resulting in his purchasing the outfit. The showman was only too glad to sell at Louis' figures, as the show had not done a paying business.

Lang made a bargain on the sly with the showman, in which it was agreed that the showman would exchange outfits with Lang—the prairie schooner for the Judy wagon—with the further agreement that Lang give him $500 if the showman would drive out of town with the schooner at twelve o'clock at night.

All the jewels, plates and money belonging to Lang were quietly transferred to the Judy wagon, and at twelve o'clock at night, Lang, dressed as the showman, and Pearl dressed in gaudy show clothes, mounted the seat of the wagon drawn by two fresh and blooded horses unknown to everybody but the Judy man and his wife, drove out of the town, and the show people, true to their agreement, set out for a journey in the prairie schooner.

Lang's leaving was made very opportunely. Not many minutes after leaving the hotel Hanchett and the remnant of his troops arrived in town, closely followed by the convicts. At about two o'clock the convicts, having traced Lang to the hotel, had set fire to the hostelry, intending to smoke Lang out; but he was far away before the ruse was discovered. After a journey of about ten hours Lang arrived in Plainville, where he was told he would be enabled to buy a extra span of horses by attending the fair, which was being held in the enclosed racing grounds on the outskirts of the town.

Having struck town during fair time, it became necessary for Lang to give an exhibition of his Punch and Judy characters, in order to avoid calling attention to himself and not give the country people a chance to learn of the treasure he carried in his wagon. Preceded and followed by a gaping crowd of boys and men, Lang entered the grounds. As a fair and racetrack, no doubt, is a familiar scene to many of my readers, I will not digress to describe this one. Suffice to say Lang gave his exhibition and then leaving Pearl in charge of the Judy wagon, purchased his team of fresh horses, which were soon afterward hitched to the wagon. Not wishing to appear in a hurry, so as to invite criticism as to why he (a poor showman) could best afford to buy fresh, rather than rest his tired horses, Lang mounted on an extra fresh horse, and watching the starting of one of the races which was about to begin. The farmer of whom Louis had just purchased his team, was standing by the horse's flank, when Louis looked over the crowd of faces and saw a familiar face—that of Bill Hawks, the convict.

ACT SURELY WAS PARDONABLE.

One Conspiracy That Might Be Looked Upon Leniently.

A. J. Drexel was asked in Philadelphia if he proposed, like William Waldorf Astor, to become a citizen of Great Britain.

Mr. Drexel smiled. He wore beautiful, tight-fitting English clothes, shoes with pale-colored tops, a tiny, upturned mustache.

"I refuse to answer that question," he said. "I detect in it evidence of a conspiracy—a conspiracy to make me unpatriotic."

He drew forth a handkerchief of soft purple silk.

"And I detest conspiracies," he said, "even when the conspirators are so oppressed and put-upon as was a certain young friend of mine.

"My friend, with wild eyes and disordered hair, rushed from his house one night with a box of expensive Havana cigars in his and.

"'O'Toole! O'Toole!' he called softly to the policeman on the beat.

"O'Toole turned curiously. My friend pointed to the lighted window of the house next door.

"'O'Toole,' he said, 'do you hear that young woman singing there?'

"'I certainly do, sir,' Officer O'Toole replied.

"'She lives next door to me, you know,' said my friend.

"'Yes, sir. Certainly, sir,' agreed the policeman.

"Then my friend thrust into the officer's hand the box of cigars.

"'The best Havanas, O'Toole,' he said. 'The very best Havana perfectos. I'll give them to you if you'll rush into that house and ask who is being murdered.'"

Weakened Col. Bryan's Argument.

A party of men, among whom was Col. William Jennings Bryan, were one night waiting for a train in a depot hotel in a small Missouri town. The landlady was the only woman present.

The talk turning upon the alleged inability of women to see the point of a joke as readily as do the men, Mr. Bryan took the ground that a sense of humor was as much a part of the feminine make-up as it was that of man, but that it merely lacked opportunity for development.

"To illustrate," said he, "take the story of a party of excursionists in the Aegean sea. When approaching the Grecian coast the party assembled about the rails to enjoy the beautiful scenery. One lady turned inquiringly to a gentleman at her right and said:

"'What is that white off there on the horizon?'

"'That is the snow on the mountains,' replied the gentleman addressed.

"'Well, that's funny,' she replied. 'My husband said it was grease.'" (Greece.)

All of the men in the group laughed noisily at Mr. Bryan's story, but the landlady looked puzzled. Finally she said:

"But, Mr. Bryan, how did the grease get on the mountain?"

Mr. Bryan at once dropped the defense of women as born humorists.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Picking Salt.

One of the sights of the Great Salt Lake of Utah, developed by the progress of scientific industry, is the system of immense salt-making ponds on the shore of the lake. At Saltair the lake water is pumped into a great settling basin, where the impurities fall to the bottom, and, containing much iron, form a reddish deposit. From this basin the water is drawn off into harvesting ponds, averaging 90,000 square yards in area, and six inches in depth. The ponds are kept supplied with water, as the evaporation goes on from May to September, when the salt harvest begins. The water having disappeared, a dazzling layer of salt, two or three inches thick, is found covering the bottom of the ponds, which is broken up with plows before being conveyed to the mills, where the final cushing and winnowing are done.—Youth's Companion.

Broad Hint.

"Mamma," said a 6-year-old Westport girl, entering the sitting room one morning recently, "don't you want some candy?"

The mother was writing a letter. "Why, yes, dear," she replied. "Give me a piece."

"I ain't dot any," came from the child, "an' I ain't dot any nickel to dit none."

She got the nickel.—Kansas City Times.

WANTED TO SEE HIS WEALTH

In the Process, Depositor Made Trouble for the Cashier.

An old negro went to the bank in which he kept his hard-earned savings and asked the paying teller to give him all the money he had deposited. He offered no explanation of his sudden desire to withdraw his funds, and after vain argument with him the teller counted out the bills and delivered them to the old man. He eyed the paper money a moment and said:

"Kin I git dat in silver, boss?"

The teller assured him he could, and forthwith made the exchange. The old negro retired to a neighboring desk, remained crouched over it a long time, and then, to the teller's great surprise, returned to the window and gleefully thrust his money back through the pigeon-hole. Before he could speak, the old man said, grinning widely:

"Thanks, boss; you kin take it back. I jes' wanted t' see ef it wuz all there."—Harper's Weekly.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. Peruna is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Letters of congratulation and commendation testifying to the merits of Peruna as a catarrh remedy are pouring in from every State in the Union. Dr. Hartman is receiving hundreds of such letters daily. All classes write these letters, from the highest to the lowest.

The outdoor laborer, the indoor artisan, the clerk, the editor, the statesman, the preacher—all agree that Peruna is the catarrh remedy of the age. The stage and rostrum, recognizing catarrh as their greatest enemy, are especially enthusiastic in their praise and testimony.

Any man who wishes perfect health must be entirely free from catarrh. Catarrh is well-nigh universal. Peruna is the best safeguard known.

A Letter from the Ex-Governor of Oregon.

The Ex-Governor of Oregon is an ardent admirer of Peruna, as it keeps it continually in the house. In a letter to Dr. Hartman, he says:

Dear Sirs:—I have had occasion to use your Peruna medicine in my family for colds, and it proved to be an excellent remedy. I have not had occasion to use it for other ailments.

Yours very truly, W. M. Lord.

It will be noticed that the Governor says he has not had occasion to use Peruna for other ailments. The reason for this is, most other ailments begin with a cold.
