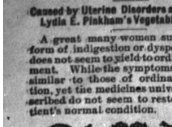
Dyspepsia of Women

ABSOLUTELY NEEDLESS AGONY

Caused by Uterine Disorders and Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A great many women suffer with a form of indigestion or dyspepsia which does not seem to yield to ordinary treatment. While the symptoms seem to be similar to those of ordinary indigestion, yet the medicines universally prescribed do not seem to restore the patient's normal condition.



Mrs. M. Wright

Mrs. Pinkham claims that there is a kind of dyspepsia that is caused by a derangement of the female organism, and which, while it causes a disturbance similar to ordinary indigestion, cannot be relieved without a medicine which not only acts as a stomach tonic, but has peculiar uterine-tonic effects also.

As proof of this theory we call attention to the case of Mrs. Maggie Wright, Brooklyn, N. Y., who was completely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after everything else had failed. She writes:

"For two years I suffered with dyspepsia which so degenerated my entire system that I was unable to attend to my daily duties. I felt weak and nervous, and nothing that I ate tasted good and it caused a disturbance in my stomach. I tried different dyspepsia cures, but nothing seemed to help me. I was advised to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, and was happily surprised to find that it acted like a fine tonic, and in a few days I began to enjoy and properly digest my food. My recovery was rapid, and in five weeks I was a well woman. I have recommended it to many suffering women."

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement, or has such a record of cures of female troubles, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Alabastine Your Walls

The most desirable thing in wall covering is opacity (covering power). Next to that is ease of application. In both of these Alabastine stands pre-eminent. Then there are other points—the firmness, the permanence, the binding qualities, and it is mixed with clear, pure water. Alabastine is not dependent on sour paste, nor smelley glue to bind it to the wall, it is an Alabaster cement that sets on the wall. It is the purest, the nicest, the best wall covering made. The most beautiful color effects, the most beautiful color schemes, the most beautiful designs are possible in Alabastine.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Less than a week later, one early afternoon, the members of the household at La Tete des Eaux were startled by the booming of cannon in the direction of Lake Borgne.

What had happened was this: An English fleet, with twelve hundred men, had, with the intention of throwing an attacking force across Lakes Borgne and Pontchartain, sailed into Lake Borgne and opened an attack upon the Americans, whose presence was a surprise to the enemy, as Capt. Lockyer, commanding the latter, had understood that this point was defenseless.

A fierce battle followed, resulting in a partial victory for the English, who were now masters of Lake Borgne.

It was the Shapira who, late in the afternoon, brought this news to La Tete des Eaux.

The house was soon in a bustle of preparation, the inmates packing hastily the few things they were to take with them in their flight, and concealing such property as would be likely to appease her relentless onward accepting the assistance of this swarthy, brigandish-looking man, whom she had never before seen, and whose very existence had been unknown to her.

"I know something of him," spoke up Mademoiselle Rose. "He is the man of whom grandpere rented Kanuahana. Didn't you know it?"

"Yes," Lazalie added, before Madame Riefet had time to frame a fitting reply, "and we have seen him many times about the woods here. Rose and I once saw Captain Jean talking with him; and I think he is very obliging."

"But all this he tells us of a cave, where we can hide, right here on the plantation, yet which no one has ever heard of before, and no one, excepting Captain Jean and himself, seems to know anything about, sounds very strange and incredible. Did your grandpere know of this cave, Mignonne?"

"I do not know, but I think not. I never heard of such a thing. Yet, madame, it surely is safer to trust this man, who tells us that Captain Jean sent him, than to stay here and risk visit from those dreadful soldiers."

"We dare not stay, and so we must trust him," said Madame, with a weak attempt at resolution, as she slid a jewel-box into the bundle Violet was preparing to fasten.

Old Zeney had come over from Kanauhand, having insisted upon being taken away with her beloved young mistress; and now she entered the room to announce that Captain Jean was below stairs.

Never had his arrival at the plantation been so welcome as now. Madame Riefet, catching up her out-of-door wraps from the bed, ordered that the various bundles be brought downstairs; for the phlegmatic Barbe had finished tying up the last one as Chloe handed Senorita Lazalie the lace scarf for her head, while Ma'am Brigida was fastening the long cloak she had insisted that her nursling should wear.

"You may feel yourself fortunate, Madame Riefet, that you are able to leave here by daylight, and not, like some people I know, be roused from sleep to find yourself a prisoner in English hands," said Lafitte, as they joined him on the stairway.

As they were descending the stairs, he called to Shapira, who was standing on the veranda, and then hurrying down, gave the latter some instructions which the others did not hear as they passed out of the house and faced the slaves, now huddled into a terrified group, with their faces full of despairing expectancy.

Some of the women began lamenting wildly when they found that they were not to go away. But Lafitte, in his usual authoritative fashion, quieted the hubbub, and ordered Shapira to take them to the Colonneh, which —as he now decided—was not to be used as a hiding-place for those whom he himself had, so unexpectedly, been able to assist.

One of his own craft, commanded by Baptistine, was lying off the Owl's Point, awaiting the signal which would announce the coming of Lafitte, who, bent upon a private mission in the neighborhood, had not reckoned upon the present denouement.

But now, in view of all the circumstances, he considered this, the boat, a more desirable means for conveying the ladies directly to Shell Island, where now were only old Scipio, Jupiter and the boy, Nato.

Waiting therefore until he saw Shapira start for the Colonneh, followed by the now quiet slaves, Lafitte, who had meantime explained his plan to his own charges, told them to follow him, and set out hurriedly in an opposite direction from that taken by Shapira and his dusky retinue.

The forest was darkening with late afternoon shadows as the fleeing party followed, in comparative silence, the tall form that led them.

At length the party emerged from the deeper shadows of their wooded way, and came into a cleared space, where the knoll known as "The Owl's Point" projected into the bayou; and halting here, Lafitte looked about him, while the others stood grouped a little distance away, awaiting quietly his movements.

But before he could give the signal to Baptistine, whose craft was concealed around the bend of the bayou, two men burst from the cover of a thicket opposite Lafitte, a gun was leveled at his breast, and a hoarse voice shouted, "Surrender, you cursed pirate!"

Rose de Cazeneau, with a wild cry, rushed between the weapon and Lafitte, while Barbe, who had been starting—as though he were a ghost—at the holder of the gun, echoed the shriek of her mistress.

"Do not—do not shoot your child!" she screamed; and, at her words, old Zeney, who stood nearest the stranger, gave him one searching look, and rushed in turn between her mistress and the gun, just as it shot out a jet of flame.

A second report mingled so closely with the first as to make them seem but one; and Zeney, with the man who had shot her, fell to the ground.

All had happened so quickly that Lafitte, who was, for an instant, unnerved by Rose de Cazeneau's effort to save him, had scarcely time to grasp a pistol before his unknown assailant fell, as if from the discharge of his own weapon, which had killed Zeney.

In their surprise and fright, and by reason of the confusion, no one except Lafitte had comprehended any meaning in the words which followed the wild cry of Barbe, who now stood sobbing hysterically, with her arms around her half-swooning mistress, while Lazalie, with dilating nostrils and blazing eyes, sought to release herself from Madame Riefet.

Baptistine, who had heard the shots, reached the shore in a small boat pulled by some of his crew, soon after Shapira appeared at the edge of the thick woods from whence had come the bullet that had killed Zeney's slayer.

The English sailor, at Lafitte's command, had surrendered his arms to Shapira, and was promised freedom, in exchange for a truthful statement of the motive which brought his companion and himself to the spot.

He said that the other man had been unknown to him until that same morning; and all he now knew of him was that he was a scout, picked up from among the Indians, and bought to serve the English. Capt. Lockyer, who was in command of the English fleet upon Lake Borgne, having learned that Lafitte was in that vicinity, had selected this scout to find and capture the man upon whom he longed to exercise personal vengeance. His orders had been to bring Lafitte to him, alive, if possible, and dead, rather than not at all; and the sailor, having been one of the crew who rowed the British officers to their mortifying conference at Grande Terre, had been sent with the scout in order to identify Lafitte.

Such was the end of the man in whom Barbe had recognized the brilliant officer of former years—recognized, despite the shock of grizzled hair, and the changes wrought by time and a lawless life in the face and form that had tempted the new year's elopement.

Meantime, Baptistine had landed; and leaving his men in the boat, he came leisurely to where Lafitte was speaking to the English sailor. The Barataran's shrewd eyes had glanced over the scene; and the fallen bodies, the group of excited women—all that he saw, told his alert perceptions what had presumably taken place, while the sight of his commander, standing unharmed, and Shapira's attitude, as he leaned upon his gun, assured him that the danger, such as it might have been, was past.

Hence his nonchalant, strolling gait to where Lafitte stood.

The latter saw him at once, and interrupted himself to bid Shapira see that the sailor awaited his further orders. Then drawing Baptistine aside, he gave him instructions in regard to placing the ladies and their maids aboard his boat.

"But it seems very dreadful to leave poor Zeney lying there," said Rose, with a tearful backward look, as Lafitte was assisting her into the small boat.

"It is not possible to do otherwise, child," he answered gently, tightening his pressure upon the small hand he was holding. "All that can be done for her now, I will see is done before I join you. Will you not trust me to do that?"

The expression of the tear-stained eyes raised to meet his look answered him without the need of speech.

"You are not coming with us?" she began, when Madame Riefet interrupted her with a shrill—"Not coming with us! Oh, Capt. Lafitte, we cannot go without you. And these strange men! Indeed!—now angrily—"we will not!"

He had put Rose aboard the boat, and turned to assist Lazalie, while he answered Madame Riefet's outburst calmly, although there was evidence of impatience held in check.

"I intend to escort you personally to Shell Island, madame; but it is best that you all go aboard the boat, my captain here has waiting around the point. He will take you to it, and then return for me, as I have a duty here which I cannot very well perform until you and the other ladies have gone. There may be other Englishmen prowling in the vicinity; and the sound of the firing may bring them this way. If this should happen, I can manage matters to far better advantage by knowing that you are out of harm's way."

Madame made no reply, but permitted him to place her in the boat. Ma'mam Brigida followed her, Violet coming last; and the sailors pushed off as Baptistine sprang aboard.

"Why does not Barbe come with us?" Madame Riefet demanded abruptly, as she saw the French woman walk to where Shapira was bending over the body of Zeney, intending—as ordered by Lafitte—to carry it into the woods for burial.

Lafitte answered from the shore. "Barbe will come with me; there is something I wish her to do, Madame Riefet, if you will kindly permit."

He had, unnoticed by the others, laid a detaining hand on Barbe's arm, and whispered, "I wish to speak with you; wait here until the boat returns."

She gave no sign of having heard him, but stood silently, until, as Violet was following Brigida into the boat, she turned and walked over to where lay the dead.

AN ACHIEVEMENT OF SCIENCE

Mental Processes in a School for Idiots.

Driveling idiots, if taken at an early age, can be made useful men and women, writes Stephen Smith, M. D., LL. D., in Leslie's Magazine for April. The methods of one institution for idiots which I visited can be cited: The instructor arranged several idiots of the same grade on the floor, and, commencing with a newcomer, he gave the child its first lesson by placing its hand on a dumbbell and striking the bell with another. The child started and involuntarily removed his hand from the bell. The exercise was repeated several times, and this was the first lesson, and was regarded as very satisfactory. The second child had been under instruction for six months, and he noticed the descent of the bell in the doctor's hand, and withdrew his hand from the bell before it was struck. The third child had been under instruction nine months, and when the blow was falling he withdrew his hand and struck the bell, and there was a faint smile on his face. The fourth child had been in the school two years, and showed his advancement by imitating the awkwardness of the other boys during the exercises. When the doctor approached him he struck the bell and struck the doctor's with a loud laugh. Thus the rudimentary and dormant nerve-cells had been aroused to activity; first the censory nerve centres of touch were stimulated and began to enlarge; then the closely affiliated centres of sight were excited, still further the process of stimulation proceeded, until the higher groups of nerve-cells were aroused, and the mental process of tracing cause and effect began, and the driveling idiot became a reasoning being.

Duly Qualified Kisses.

Some individual with oceans of time on his hands has conceived the idea of hunting through the works of English novelists for the purpose of finding all the adjectives used to qualify the word kiss. The result is as follows:

Cold, warm, icy, burning, chilly, cool, loving, indifferent, balsamic, fragrant, blissful, passionate, aromatic, with tears bedewed, long, soft, hasty, intoxicating, lingering, delicious, pious, tender, beguiling, hearty, distracted, frantic, fresh-as-the-morning, breathing fire, divine, satanic, glad, sad, superficial, quiet, loud, fond, heavenly, execrable, devouring, ominous, fevered, parching, nervous, soulless, stupefying, slight, careless, anxious, painful, sweet, refreshing, embarrassed, shy, mute, ravishing, holy, sacred, firm, hurried, faithless, narcotic, feverish, immoderate, sisterly, brotherly, and paradisaical. The task seemed interminable, and he gave up at this stage.

Australia's Rabbit Plague.

The last spell of heat cleared off a multitude of rabbits directly around Broken Hill, and although there are still many about, they are not nearly so plentiful as a few weeks ago. However, apparently there has been no diminution on the holdings a few miles from Broken Hill. At one well-known station the lessee has been trapping the rabbits at the tank when they come to drink. In this way no fewer than 35,000 rabbits have been exterminated at one tank in a fortnight. A carload containing 700 rabbits was put on the scales and weighed one ton.—Melbourne Argus

Historic Thimbles.

In Mrs. Vanderbilt's collection thimbles, which is the envy of her friends, there are several that are not only very beautiful, but historically valuable as well. Among the latter, and probably most highly valued by their fortunate owner, is one which was originally worn by Queen Elizabeth; another, which shows its royal owner knew its use, was the property of Princess Alice; still another dainty conception in gold and enamel once belonged to the Princess of Wales, while most valued of all is one said to have been used by Queen Victoria when she was a girl.

AGRICULTURE

Prepare the Land Well.

Every year we see farmers here and there obtaining yields of crops far above the average for the country or for their community. There are various causes for this, one of the most common being the better condition in which these crops are put into the ground. An excuse that is very often given for the practice of slipshop methods in seeding is that the land is in such shape that a good job cannot be done.

There are sometimes conditions of weather that justify such excuses but in the main they are not well founded. The seed bed could be put in good shape and the seed put in good condition if enough work were put into the operation. With much of the ground unstirred and the balance in a poorly pulverized condition, much of the seed left on top of the ground, is it any wonder that we have a low yield of crops in many cases?

It goes without saying that more work to a given amount of ground is required to put the crop in in good shape than to do the seeding in a slipshod manner, but it does not require any more work in proportion to the amount of crop secured. On new lands and in favorable seasons fairly good results may be obtained by spreading the operations out over a large area, but in the older lands, stocked with weed seeds and more or less denuded of their vegetable matter, thorough work is what counts.

The more worn and depleted, through neglect, the land becomes the more work will be necessary to develop a good seed bed and the more essential a good seed bed becomes. The action of the vegetable matter in regulating the temperature, moisture conditions, and rendering soluble mineral plant food in a good soil, must be replaced largely by more efficient cultivation in the poorer soils. The man who styled cultivation as the poor man's manure was not so far wrong. For while it cannot take the place, entirely, of this essential factor of a soil it may be made to lessen materially the evil effects of its absence.

The thoroughly prepared seed bed has several advantages over the one poorly prepared. The seed can be well covered so that all will get a good strong start. It will provide a better condition of soil and better moisture conditions that will push the crops along more rapidly. The plant food will be dissolved and ready for the use of the plant at an earlier date by reason of the better condition of the soil. This is especially true of the nitrogenous portion, as the nitrates will not be formed at all until certain favorable conditions of temperature, moisture and aeration have been reached.

The importance of having the plant food ready at an early date will be more fully appreciated if we will keep in mind the fact that most of the mineral food is taken up by the plant during the early stages of growth, and if a liberal supply is not available at this time the crop will suffer. In the case of the small grain crops three-fourths of the mineral plant food is taken up during the first fifty days of growth and nearly all of it by the time the crop heads out.—J. J. Edgerton in Farmers' Review.

Effects of English Stock Shows.

A factor that has done a great deal for the English people in this respect is their excellent system of breeding and their fat stock shows. These people get a great deal more good out of these shows, as a class, than do our own people. It is a sight never to be forgotten to witness the throngs of people at one of these shows, who with catalogue in hand, make a critical examination of each animal, in regular order, throughout the entire show. These shows are exceptionally well managed, from the standpoint of affording the greatest possible amount of educational advantage. The animals are stabled not only according to breeds, but according to classes All bulls of a certain age of one breed are to be found in consecutive order in the same row of stalls. The judging is always completed early the opening day, and the awards hung up in a conspicuous place at the head of each animal, so that there is not the slightest difficulty in finding all of the prize-winning animals. This sensible system of stabling, combined with an equally good system of cataloguing, renders the inspection of the animals a very pleasant and highly instructive task. This systematic inspection of the animals commences immediately after the completion of the judging work, and continues with ever-increasing interest until the close of the show. It is a fact that the young men learn the lessons and receive the inspiration which leads them on to become the breeders of their day and age. Those of more mature age, and oftentimes having had long years of successful breeding work, are as eager for a chance to make a critical examination of the prize winners as are the younger men, for these men of experience have long since learned that a string of good young things are not the result of chance or accident, but are the never-failing indication that a good sire will be found on the farm from whence the youngsters came. It is in this manner that many a successful sire has been located.—W. J. Kennedy in Farmers' Review.

The Public Sale.

The public sale of swine is without doubt an educator of no small value. The man that has only poorly-fashioned hogs does not hold a sale. It would be of no use for him to do so. The man that puts his money into stock for a sale and puts money into advertising that sale has something good to offer. The farmers well understand this and attend together in large numbers. The animals they see are object lessons that are not forgotten when the farmers return to their homes. If the farmer does not buy a single animal he benefits himself, even by his attendance at the sale.

On the farm most experiences with poultry are success

Senor Quesada, Cuban Minister to the United States, is an orator born. In an article in The Outlook for July, 1898, by George Kennan, who heard Quesada speak at the Esteban Theatre, Matanzas, Cuba, he said: "I have seen many audiences under the spell of eloquent speech and in the grip of strong emotional excitement; but I have rarely witnessed such a scene as at the close of Quesada's eulogy upon the dead patriot, Martí." In a letter to The Peruna Medicine Company, written from Washington, D. C., Senor Quesada says:

"Peruna I can recommend as a very good medicine. It is an excellent strengthening tonic, and it is also an efficacious cure for the almost universal complaint of catarrh."—Gonzalo De Quesada.

Congressman J. H. Bankhead, of Alabama, one of the most influential members of the House of Representatives, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., gives his endorsement to the great catarrh remedy, Peruna, in the following words:

"Your Peruna is one of the best medicines I ever tried, and no lathily should be without your remarkable remedy. As a tonic and catarrh cure I know of nothing better."—J. H. Bankhead.

There is but a single medicine which is a radical specific for catarrh. It is Peruna, which has stood a half century test and cured thousands of cases.

IMPORTANT FACTS FOR COW OWNERS

The mechanical Cream Separator has become a vital feature of every home dairy just as of every butter factory.

Its use means much more and much better cream and butter, as well as saving of water, ice, time and room.

The difference in results is not small but big. Few cows now pay without a separator. Dairying is the most profitable kind of farming with cows.

95% of the creamery butter of the world is now made with De Laval machines, and there are over 500,000 farm users besides.
