A Well-Cared For Flock. One of the best-cared for flocks of hens of which we know is owned by Frank A. Windes, of Winnebago, Illinois. Mr. Windes had 25 hens at the beginning of 1904 and now has 30. His egg returns last year were by months as follows: January, 24; February, 80; March, 32; April, 49; May, 37; June, 48; July, 36; August, 29; September, 22; October, 26; November, 115; December, 19; total, 2,787.

Two-thirds of the fowls are Barred Plymouth Rocks; these laid during the winter. The other third consist of Rose Comb Black Minorcas, and three are doing most of the laying now. Between the two breeds Mr. Windes gets eggs most of the time. Mr. Windes says: "When I first began to raise poultry I had a hen house that I was keeping my hens in during 1903. On that account I got no eggs in November or December of that year. The fowls were lousy and that is perhaps one reason why the egg yield failed entirely before the beginning of 1904. I had my new house built, and the fowls were receiving better care. The result was that I got 24 eggs in November, but my flock had not then really begun to feel the effect of the improved housing and better care. The result was that I got 24 eggs in November, but my flock had not then really begun to feel the effect of the improved housing and better care."

With one exception I have not lost a hen since I began to raise poultry. I have a hen house of course lost some young chicks. I find the house cutter a great help in my feeding operations, and the house cutter does not cost more than ten cents a week. The other feed consists mostly of wheat, oats and some cut clover, which I mix up with table scraps and the like.

I bought 200 head of cabbages last fall and these proved a great source of green food for the hens during the winter. Since purchasing my house cutter, I have been grinding up the cabbages in the cutter. Most of the corn the fowls get is given on the ear. I tie a ear of corn to a string and suspend it so they will have to work to get the kernels. If I have some loose corn left I scatter it in chaff so the hens cannot get it too easily. I do not believe in feeding corn largely, and my fowls do not get over three bushels during the year.

"I clean out the hen house about once in two weeks, which is often enough under most conditions." I bought a 50-cent kerosene spray pump and with it I spray the roosts and nests. I also spray the hens when they are on the roosts, using for the spraying liquid an emulsion of one part of kerosene to four parts water. "The nests are all of earth and have a little straw in them. These nests I use all winter, and cover the combination with a little straw.

"With everything arranged properly, it does not take much time each day to care for poultry. I use about a half hour's morning and night. I plan to give the fowls plenty of water, and keep oyster shells before them all the time in addition to grit and cut bone. These latter are fed in a hopper having three compartments. "I have not been able to find a mile or lone since I built my new house a little over a year ago. The roosts are all movable, and this makes it easy to keep them in a sanitary condition. I try to keep the hen house warm in winter and to help in doing this I used some old mesh wire, putting straw between the uprights and holding it in place by the wire. Not one of my hens got a frost-bitten last winter.

I ventilate my house by means of a door in the floor which is open except in the cold nights of winter. I think the ventilation is not yet perfect and I am planning other improvements in this line. "I find that the best bone to use is beef bone. Mattin bones, silver, and hog bones contain too much fat on them. The best beef bones are the sections of the backbone, as they have the best possible finish for the bone. "Well," queried the family friend, "that kind best. I think I will have some trouble in keeping the bone cruder clean in hot weather, but I intend to use enough hot water to obtain that." - Farmers' Review.

Chickens as Insect Destroyers. Chickens may be made much use of in the garden as destroyers of insects after the plants are up high enough so that the fowls will not dig them up in scratching. We have heard of people using chickens as protectors of the cabbage patch when the said cabbages were over-run with grasshoppers. It is hardly possible they would make war on the cabbage worms if given a chance. Value of Muck. The purpose of muck depends on the muck for which it is to be used and also on its composition. Mucks vary in composition all the way from nearly true peat to heavy clay. The ordinary muck contains a very large per cent of vegetable matter, sometimes as much as 75 per cent. The seeds of muck are worth a cord of barnyard manure if the nitrogen one is considered, while one and one-half cords of muck are worth one cord of barnyard manure if the vegetable matter only is considered.
