

The Bluebird

Feathered babe of heaven's blue,
...and the sky upon your wings;
...happy from my darling's eye;
...O, my sweet humpbacked,
...O, my sweet humpbacked,
...O, my sweet humpbacked,
...O, my sweet humpbacked,

BY CHARLES S. REID

There was a subtle power he had always held in reserve for some situation in which...
The conception was perfect, but where thought alone, he would be found the model? In his thoughts, Margoulis carefully went over the list of models that he knew, and...
When it was discovered that the Countess Alfretti had disappeared, a great cry was raised and all London was aroused.

An intense whiteness settled upon the countess's face.

The search for the missing Countess was extended so assiduously, and plausible suggestion was acted upon, but all resulted fruitlessly...
On this occasion, when their eyes met, she descended immediately from her carriage and entered the building. Margoulis met her looking at her as if through each department of his rooms with all the affability of manner of which he was capable,

Margoulis spoke her name and she turned quickly toward him. He finally escorted her out again, with a profusion of thanks and appreciation expressed in his parting words.
Margoulis waited patiently a few days. But at last, one afternoon, late, he passed the house which was occupied by Alfretti and his wife. The Countess was standing over some flowers near the street. Margoulis spoke her name, and she turned quickly toward him.

surged up from his breast. His eyes sought those of Margoulis, and the hypnotic fire that leaped to meet his gaze told the story of the Countess's name.

HAD WAITED TOO LONG.
Dish Towels Were No Longer Needed by the Bachelor.

He had, been keeping bachelor hall under the supervision of a favorite girl cousin, and once a week she came to dine with him and observe his progress...
Then came a day when he rose in revolt and decided that he would keep house no longer. So far as the cooking had been concerned, he kept his word and the cousin was invited to dine at a restaurant instead.

The bachelor guessed in vain and drove to the police station to keep a secret triumph over the girl...
"You're just going to tell me that I have those eyes, and I'm a bit plumped, triumphantly, as she watched for the pleased smiles she felt to be genuine. She guessed the truth from his face."
