He will not participate again in senatorial committee affairs for fear of a relapse, and the rest of his term will take no part in his normal legislative duties. "It is my belief," said Senator Alger, "I have decided not to again make the race for public office. I am going to give up public life."

Three weeks ago I was fully confident that I would be in at the running. Since that time, however, I have been treated by Dr. Billings, of Chicago, a specialist in heart disease, and he tells me that should I attempt to run for office I would be exposing myself to a certain death. For this reason I am going to retire from public life. My family duty is to my family. They are more to me than anything else on earth. It is my duty to go home to give up public life.

There has been upon me that I have had a very bad cold, but the members of my family have insisted that I come back to the office. And I had the next week but if I were not only the family doctor, I would not give up my public life.
