

THE GIRL

Once Again the Summer Girl Has Proved Herself a Real Heroine with a Remarkable List of Successful Deeds of Courageous Rescue.

Which is the braver—man or woman?

This is a question that anybody can answer, for the simple reason that it is impossible to tell to what degree of heroism either will go when occasion demands. A little girl of five years, under ordinary conditions would scream at the sight of a tiny flame, all dash through a conflagration to save the life of a baby brother who has fallen into the lake.

A young woman daintily clad and afraid in her normal mood to go into the water without holding to the life-line, will, forgetting self entirely, plunge into the stormy flood to rescue a drowning person as quickly as the trained life-saver.

Compared individually with members of the opposite sex, women to-day stand forth abashed—the New York World. For instance, the summer girl and the summer man, clasped together in ordinary affairs, are apart, when it comes to matters of heroism. It is the summer girl who shows "the real stuff" when it comes to a pinch.

All summer long these have been young women who have performed deeds of real heroism. Many of them have not been reported in public print. The attributes of bravery on the part of our women is that new. This summer's exhibitions of it are only new. And it is only—about that the story of some of them should be told again.

When young Fred Buckley fell from the pier into the sea at Floyd Heights, N. Y., only Mrs. V. E. Campbell saved his life. She swam out to him, then, as she saw the lad rise and sink out of sight again, she plunged into the water. She was fully clothed and swam with difficulty. There was still enough life in the boy when she reached him and, with a desperate effort, made him grasp her arm. She then, with a gasp, turned back to the shore and, with a gasp, turned back to the shore.

At Lake Huntington Miss Edna Hartman saved the lives of two young boys who were on the beach. She saw them in danger and, with a gasp, turned back to the shore. She was fully clothed and swam with difficulty. There was still enough life in the boys when she reached them and, with a desperate effort, made them grasp her arm. She then, with a gasp, turned back to the shore.

brought the unconscious woman to shore

Saved Two from Death.
Then there was the brave rescue of Mrs. Frederick R. Crane, of Brooklyn, of her ten-year-old daughter and the fatherly playmate, who together fell off a pier into deep water at Saybrook, N. Y. She went in after them. Encumbered by her heavy clothing, she performed a great feat of physical prowess in bringing the two girls safely to land, where she herself sank exhausted from the shock and strain. And not least among the water heroines is Miss Mattie Sheehan, of this city, who a few weeks ago plunged into the Navarino river and saved the life of James Edward Connolly, a rejected merchant of Washington, and personal friend of President Roosevelt. Miss Sheehan swam a long distance to reach Mr. Connolly, who had fallen into the water from a canoe and could not swim. With consummate skill she brought him safely to land.

Another "little mother" of five years, Hannah Lavin, of No. 774 East One Hundred and Fifty-second street, was left alone to care for her baby brothers while the real mother went to market. When Mrs. Lavin returned, she found her children in an excited group in front of the house and smoke was pouring from the windows of her flat. She swooned in attempting to make her way through the halls, suffocating with smoke to the third floor, where she had left her children. But nonviable little Hannah had worked her way out of the burning flat. Little three-year-old Joe clinging to her skirts and the one-year-old baby in her arms, she ran with an old shawl to shut off the light and suffocating smell of the smoke. Willing hands were ready at the last light of stairs to help the heroine and her charges.

WRESTLING IN SCOTLAND.
Athletic Sport on the Famous Field at Glasgow.

Wrestling dropped its armor, had milder fall force and ran to the middle of the road. She seized the bride of the house as if not afraid of her, and held on until she was safely on the surface he was some distance from the boat, and Miss Bowen saw that she was not a moment too soon. She sprang into the water and swam to the youngster. She got a firm hold of him and pulled him back to the side of the boat.

Eleven-Year-Old Heroine.
This brave deed was equaled, if not surpassed, by the achievement of little Mary Edick, age 11, granddaughter of United States Commissioner Sheldie, in saving the life of her playmate, Tommy Williams, aged ten. It was in the Hudson river, and longer than he had ever attempted before. And then discovered, out there all alone, that his strength was failing. That discovery brought panic, and with a scream for help, he sank.

At first Mrs. Williams, watching his frantic struggles, thought he was still playing, but when he rose to the surface only the back of his head showed, she held on to the boat. Instantly, with all her strength toward the ripping waves dropped its armor, had milder fall force and ran to the middle of the road.
