

GAMBLER GAVE BACK FORTUNE

There is a well authenticated story of Jerome Davis, a London gambler, who had inherited a colossal fortune, which he had already gambled away.

Jerome was in great luck. Main after main he won, and as often wished to cease play, but Hastings, who continued to play after the glass of champagne down his parched throat, was pallid with excitement, and insisted upon a chance to retrieve his fortune.

The rattle of the dice and the ceaseless flow of wips went on all night and far into the next day. Hastings was mad with excitement, and every round and every security he possessed or could think of he pledged and lost.
