FRANKLIN

Wedding bells are ringing.

Miss Ad lie Sly gave a linen shower on St. Patrick's day, March 17th in honor of Miss Essie Pickering. The afternoon was more like an informal gathering of young friends of the bride to be and also of Miss Addie. A floral puzzle was in vogue, a love story taken from the leaves of a bride's journal, "Her Name Was Rose". Some 20 questions were given to be answered in the names of flowers, the one answering the most receiving a prize the next to receive one also, Miss Myrtle Colby received first and Mrs. Volney Miller and Grace Beebee cut for second, Mrs. Miller being the lucky one. A very dainty luncheon was served when a love-knot cake was brought forth containing a ring and thimble a piece to be taken by the young ladies only, the one receiving the ring to be married before the year is over and the one receiving the thimble to pass her remaining days in single blessedness, the honor of an old maid. Just imagine the excitement of all. Miss Elsa Pickering sister of the bride elect, received the ring and Miss Nettie Dunbar the thimble. A very enjoyable time was had by all, the afternoon being a practious tribute to the hospitality of the hostess.

Mrs. James VanEvery Jr. was one of the guests at the linen shower and on being notified that a tramp had made his appearance and wanted something to eat, she rushed to the kitchen and to her dismay found her husband enjoying the wonds of the occasion, you can well imagine the expression of her countenance. Never mind Jim, such luncheons are only given but once in a life time, especially to tramps.

A St. Patrick's party was given by the stock holders of Franklin hall, the color scheme being green in honor of St. Pat. Many tripped the light fantastic until the wee small hours.

Miss Adline Higby of Pontiac was visiting at G.H. German's one day this week.

The ladies aid met at the home of Mrs. E. Miller. A large number attended and all enjoyed the 5 o'clock luncheon served.

And now it has come to light that Franklin isn't the only village in existance noted for its evil ways (as the good pastor tells us). Farmington is making her cry to the evil of card parties. Now the question arises, isn't a little amusement better to brighten up the pathway of life to the most of us fighting to keep the wolf from our door than melancholy to darken the way of loneliness which which many times leads to the asylums.

The Maccabees gave a banquet on St. Patricks eve. One hundred and thirty eges were served in different ways with any good things to go with them.

Cards are out announcing the marriage of John Carrin to Elsie Pickering March 28th. Congratulations are extended.

The Horse's Dental Battery.

It is interesting to study evolution relating to the masticating apparatus of the horse, which someone has aptly termed his "dental battery." The prehistoric or "dawn" horse was a little, fawn-colored, spotted animal, not over eleven inches high and with such short-crowned teeth that they wore out in eight or ten years, so that he succumbed from inability to chew food. This little horse had five toes and was little like our modern representative of the equine race, but gradually, through a few millions of years, it is supposed, changed in type. Trace has been found of him grown to fourteen inches in height, then eighteen inches, or about as big as a sheep and later to forty inches, or the average height of a Shetland pony.

There are several different types, too, and the teeth in each were gradually increasing in length and size of crown and reducing in number, for the prehistoric horse had seven molars on each side above and below, while the modern horse has but six, in each jaw. As the four superfluous toes became extinct, so to speak, the middle toe or digit enlarged and strengthened, and was fitted with a foot, making it the most perfect standing, walking and running weight-carrier extant. All the while, too, the mouth was lengthening and the molar teeth increasing in width and length, so that in the modern horse at least we find a set of molars so strong and long that they can well withstand twenty-five to thirty years of masticating.

The composition of these molar teeth is marvelously perfect for the purposes which they fulfill. They are made of three materials of different densities, and as the wear of each is necessarily different the bearing surface of each tooth is consequently kept rough, so that it may grind well, as does the burr stone of a grist mill. The three constituent substances of a tooth are Dentine, which is composed of 76 per cent earthy material and 24 per cent animal matter; Enamel, 95 per cent earthy matter and 5 per cent animal matter; Cement, 67 per cent earthy matter and 33 per cent animal matter. The enamel is present in irregular curves and cylinders and columns from one end of the tooth to the other and between these layers is the dentine and the cement.

The enamel at all times projects above the other substances of the tooth and gives the necessary roughness for food grinding. In the young teeth the molar teeth (permanent) are so long that their roots are close up to the eye in the skull, but as the animal ages the crowns gradually wear down and the necessary surface for mastication is supplied by gradual descent of the molar. The tooth does not grow, as some erroneously think, but it comes down in its socket so that the root is constantly becoming nearer and nearer to the gums, and is quite short by the time the horse is thirty years old.

The milk teeth are small, white and smooth. The permanent teeth (incisors or nippers) are large, broad, yellowish in color and have deep, brownish yellow marks down their front surfaces. On the grinding surface of the upper and lower incisors there are cups surrounded by black-colored rims. These are the "marks" by which one can closely approximate the horse's age. When the full complement of milk teeth is present the first change is the substitution of two permanent incisors above and below in the center. This happens at from two years and nine months to three years; at three and a half to four years the lateral or second pair of incisors come in, and at four and a half to five years the corner or third pair of incisors appear and along with them (in males) the tushes or bridle teeth. At six the marks disappear from the central incisors, at seven from the laterals, at eight from the corners and nine from the middle pair in upper jaw and at ten a yellow mark or line appears at gum of corner upper incisor, and gradually comes down the tooth and is in wear at about twenty years. These nine and ten-year-old signs are indefinite and not wholly reliable. The hardest time in a colt's life is when he is past three, when he is casting twelve teeth and cutting sixteen. At this time he should therefore have the best of care, shelter and food.—W. S. Alexander in Farmers' Review.

Care of Early Pigs.

In caring for early pigs we must give them nourishing food, plenty of pure water, a good-sized lot to run in and a place to sleep that will protect them from dampness. When they are three weeks old they will begin to eat very rapidly and should be fed by themselves. A mixture of wheat shorts and bran is a good feed and skim milk is excellent, but it is not best to give them any more than they will eat up clean, as it is liable to sour in the trough. Shelled corn or oats is good and should not be put in the trough, but if it is scattered on the ground the pigs will pick it up and eat slow. We must guard them plenty of pure water, as this is very essential for any animal. They should be provided with a good run in order to obtain plenty of exercise, for they can't be shut up and be healthy. It is natural for any little animal to take exercise. If we keep the pigs confined the thumps will likely develop. That means too much fat, which clogs the action of the heart, retards the circulation of the blood and causes death. We also must provide for them dry quarters to sleep in. Damp sleeping places are very injurious to all kinds of young stock, and with the pig, if it does not kill him outright, it is liable to cause him a train of ills that will cost us very nearly all of the profit, if not all.—J. S. Underwood, Johnson Co., Ill.

LYCEUM

Lewis Morrison, famous all over the country for the subtlest and finest exposition of Satan the modern stage can show, will himself appear at the Lyceum theatre on next Sunday evening as Mephisto in "Faust", with a cast and scenery which surpass those of all previous productions of this play, under the direction of Jules Murray. With Lewis Morrison himself as Mephisto, a good production is guaranteed. With a new prologue employing seventeen exquisitely painted scenes an invisible choir and a display of electrical effects, centering into one pure white ray resting on the gates of heaven thronged by the heavenly host, and a dozen other novel and startling effects, the production is bound scenically and in point of acting to be the finest ever staged of this particular play. The subtlety and bitterness, the tremendous declamation and the merciless gibing mockery of this insidious character as delineated by Lewis Morrison have placed him on a pinnacle above all imitators and established his fame as the fame he enjoys as the finest Mephisto in the world. The engagement is for one week with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

WHITNEY

For variety and dissimilarity of characters, "Lured from Home", which will be seen at the Whitney all next week, commencing Sunday afternoon, can compare favorably with any show of its kind on the road. There is a little girl, the daughter of the hero and heroine, the golden link of love; the arch villain and villainess; the tramp, who in the end sees the folly of his ways and reforms; the suited broad but honest jockey and his sweetheart; and the typical bowery tough, who will stop at nothing to gain his end where money is at stake. The story of the play is wholesome, containing a strong and well defined moral, and the mechanical effects are all that could be desired. Matinees will be given daily, except on Wednesday.

SOUSA'S BAND.

It is indeed remarkable how Sousa, who with his famous band will be seen at the Lyceum for a single concert Friday afternoon, March 30th, maintains his hold upon the admiration and enthusiasm of his audiences. For example, he has been going to Chicago for years with his famous band, yet the Post writes of his appearance there in Orchestra hall on March 11, as though he were a newcomer, whose brilliance had fairly overcome them. Here are its glowing words in the issue of March 12th.—"A breathless audience filled Orchestra hall yesterday. Sousa, the magician bandmaster, stood with his baton poised in the air, the trombones marched out and leveled their elastic instruments at the top gallery. Then, like a great wave, the volume of sound swept over the enchanted house. The music must have called forth strange memories. At the first strains of "Stars and Stripes Forever", the piece which brought a nation to its feet during the Spanish war, a dozen veterans rose from their seats and waved their hats enthusiastically. 'Glad I wasn't too old to follow the flag up San Juan Hill' exclaimed one grizzled warrior. He was a veteran of the Grand Army.

NOTHING SUCCEEDS LIKE SUCCESS

Tells of the Remarkable Success of Pepsikola Tablets in Relieving Indigestion.

After selling all kinds of remedies for dyspepsia and stomach troubles we can truthfully say that we never knew anything to give such universal satisfaction as Pepsikola Tablets. They not only aid digestion but they act as a grand nerve tonic as well. Many Birmingham people who have not enjoyed a good meal for years now say that after using one or two 25 cent boxes of these little tablets they feel as if they could eat a horse and digest it too. Whitehead & Mitchell and Cobb & Cobb have been recommending this grand dyspepsia remedy for nearly two years now, and from actual experience knows there is no other remedy so sure to relieve sour stomach, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, palpitation, sleeplessness, wind belching, and other distressing symptoms of indigestion. And Pepsikola Tablets must cure you or there is nothing to pay. They will renew your energy, steady your nerves, regulate the action of your heart improve your appetite, put new life in your stomach, and will do more to tone up and improve your general health than anything you ever heard of.
